THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT I. SCENE I.

Enter Winlove, and his Man Tranio.

WINLOVE.

I AM quite weary of a Country Life: there is that Little thing the World calls Quiet, but there is nothing elſe; Clowns live and die in't, whoſe Souls lye hid there, and after Death their Names: My kinder Stars (I thank 'em) have Wing'd my Spirit with an Active Fire, which makes me wiſh to know what Men are Born for, to Dyet a Running Horſe, to give a Hawk caſting, to know Dogs Names; Theſe make not Men; no, 'tis Philoſophy, 'tis Learning, and Exerciſe of Reaſon to know what's Good and Virtuous, and to break our Stubborn and Untemper'd Wills, to choose it; This makes us Imitate that Great Divinity that Fram'd us,

Tran. I thought you had Learn'd Philosophy enough at Oxford, what betwixt Aristotle on one side, and Bottle-Ale on the other, I am confident you have arriv'd at a Pitch of Learning and Virtue sufficient for any Gentleman to set up with in the Country, that is, to be the Prop of the Family.

Winl. My Father's Fondness has kept me so long in the Country, I've forgot all I'd Learn'd at the University: Besides, take that at Best, it but Rough-cast's us; No, London is the Choisest Academy, 'tis that must Polish us, and put a Gloss upon our Country-Studies; Hither I'm come at last, and do resolve to Glean many Vices. Thou, Tranio, hast been my Companion, still one Bed has held us, one Table fed us; and tho' our Bloods give me Precedency (that I count Chance) My Love has made us Equal, and I have found a frank return in thee.

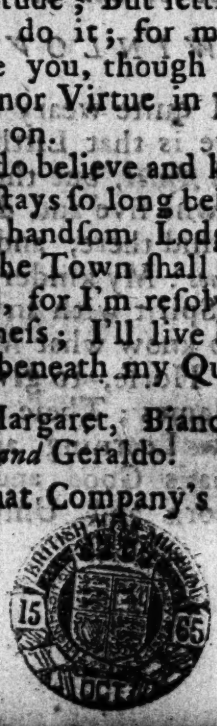
Tran. Such a Discourse commands a Serious Answer; Know then, your Kindness tells me, I must Love you: The Good you have Taught me Commands me to Honour you; I have Learnt, with you, to hate Ingratitude; But setting those aside, for thus I may seem do it; for my own sake, be assur'd, I must Love you, though you hate me, I neither look at Vice nor Virtue in you, but as you are the Person I dote on.

Winl. No more; I do believe and know thou lov'st me: I wonder Jemy stays so long behind; You must look our to get me handsom Lodgings, fit to receive such Friends the Town shall bring me; you must take care of all, for I'm resolv'd to make my Study my sole Business; I'll live handsomly, not over high, nor yet beneath my Quality.

Enter Beaufoy, Margaret, Biancha, Woodall, and Geraldo.

But stay a little, What Company's this?

Beau.



Beau. Gentlemen, Importune no farther, you know my firm Reſolve, not to beſtow my Youngeſt Daughter, before I have a Husband for the Elder; if either of you both Love Pegg, becauſe I know you well, and love you well: You ſhall have freedom to Court Her at your Pleaſure.

Wood. That is to ſay, we ſhall have leave to have our Heads broken, a prime Kindneſs, by'ur Lady, ſhe's too rough for me; There, Geraldo, take her for me, if you have any Mind to a Wife; to her, you are Young, and may clap Trammel's on her, and ſtrike her to a Pace in time; I dare not deal with her, I ſhall never get her out of her high Trot.

Marg. 'Tis ſtrange, Sir, you ſhould make a Stale of me among theſe Mates thus.

Geral. Mates, Madam, 'Faith, no Mates for you, unleſs you were a little Tamer; wo worth him that has the Breaking of you?

Marg. Take heed I don't beſtow the Breaking of your Calves Head for you; You Mate, Marry come up; go, get you a Sempſtreſs, and run in Score with her for Muckinders to dry your Noſe with, and Marry her at laſt to pay the Debt: And you there, Goodman Turnip-eater, with your Neats-Leather Phiſnomy, I'll ſend your Kitchen-wench to Liquor it this Wet-weather; Whoſe old Boots was it cut out of?

Ger. From all ſuch Petticoat Devils deliver us I pray.

Tran. Did you ever ſee the like, Sir? that Wench is either ſtark Mad, or wonderful Froward.

Wood. I can't tell, but I had as live take her Dowry with this condition, to be whipt at Charing-croſs every Morning.

Ger. Faith as you ſay, there's ſmall choice in rotten Apples, but ſince 'tis as 'tis, let us be Friendly Rivals, and endeavour for a Husband for Margaret, that Biancha may be free to have one, and then he that can win her, wear her.

Wood. I would give the beſt Horſe in Smith-field to him that would throughly Woe her, Wed her, and Bed her, and rid the Houſe of her, to carry her far enough of; well, come agreed. Exeunt.

Tran. But pray Sir, is't poſſible that Love ſhou'd of a ſudden take ſuch hold of you.

Win. O Tranio, till I found it to be true, I never found it poſſible, but ſhe has ſuch attractive Charms, he were a Stone that did not Love her, I am all fire, burn, pine, periſh Tranio, unleſs I win her; Counſel me, and Aſſiſt me, Dear Tranio.

Tran. Are all your Reſolutions for Study come to this? you have got a Book will hold you tack, you are like to be a fine Virtuoſo, now muſt we go to a Chymiſt to ſet his Still a going for Philters——Love Powders and Extracts of Sighs and Highoes.

Win. Nay Tranio, do not make Sport with my Paſſion, it is a thing ſo deeply rooted here, it cannot dye, but it muſt take me with it; help me, or hope not long to ſee thy Maſter?

Tran. Nay Sir, if you are ſo far gone there's no remedy, we muſt contrive ſome way, but 'twill be difficult; for you know her Father has mew'd her up, and till he has rid his hands of her Siſter there's no coming near her.

Win. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel Father's He, but don't you remember what care he took to provide Maſters for her.

Tran. Yes Sir; and what of all that?

Win. Y'are a Fool, can't I be prefer'd to her, to teach her French, I have a good command of the Language, and it may be eaſily done.

Tran. I don't apprehend the eaſineſs of it; for who ſhall be Sir Lyonels Son here in Town? To ply his Studies, and welcome his Friends, viſit his Kindred, and entertain 'em.

Win. Be content, I have a Salve for that too; we have not yet been ſeen in any Houſe, nor can be diſtinguiſh'd by our Faces, for Man or Maſter. Then i

it follows thus, you Tranio muſt be young Winlove in my ſtead, and bear your ſelf according to my rank; I'll be an ordinary French Maſter about the Town, the time I ſtay'd in France, in that will help me, it muſt be ſo. Come, come, uncaſe, and take my Cloathes and when we're at our Lodgings, we'll make a full change; when Jemmy comes he waits on thee, but firſt I'll charm his Tongue.

Tran. 'Twill be needful, ſince this is your Pleaſure I'm ty'd to be Obedient, for ſo your Father charg'd me at your Parting, altho' I think 'twas in another ſenſe; In ſhort I'm ready to ſerve you, and aſſiſt you in your Enterprize.

Enter Jemmy.

Win. Here comes the Rogue. Sirrah, Where have you been?

Jem. Where have I been? Pray how now Maſter, where are you Maſter, has Tranio Stoln your Cloathes, or you his, or both?

Win. Sirrah come hither, this is not time to Jeſt. Some weighty Reaſons make me take this Habit; enquire not; you ſhall know 'em time enough; mean while wait you on Tranio in my ſtead I charge you as becomes you, you underſtand me.

Jem. Ay, Sir, ne'er a whit.

Win. And not of Tranio, one word in your Mouth, he's turn'd to Winlove.

Jem. The better for him, would I were ſo too.

Tran. When I am alone with you, why then I am Tranio ſtill, in all places elſe, your Maſter Winlove.

Win. Tranio, let's go, one thing yet remains, which you muſt by no means neglect, that is, to make one amongſt theſe Wars; Ask me not why, but be ſatisfy'd, my Reaſons are both good and weighty.

Tran. I obey, Sir. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Petruchio, and his Man Sauny.

Pet. SIrrah, leave off your Scotch, and ſpeak me Engliſh, or ſomething like it.

Saun. Gude will I Sir.

Pet. I think we have Ridden Twenty Miles in Three Hours, Sauny are the Horſes well Rubb'd down and Litter'd.

Saun. Deel O my Saul, Sir, I ne'er Scrub'd my ſel better than I Scrub'd your Naggs.

Pet. And thou need'ſt Scrubbing. I'll ſay that for thee, thou Beaſtly Knave; Why do ye not get your ſelf Cur'd of the Mange.

Saun. S'breed, Sir, I w'ud ne'a be cur'd for a Thouſand Pund; there's nea a Lad in aw Scotland but Loves it; Gude Sauny might hang himſel an it were nor for Scratting and Scrubbing.

Pet. Why ſo Prithee?

Saun. When ye gea 'tull a Ladies Houſe, ye are Blith and Bonny Sir, and gat gut Meat, but the Dee'l a bit gat's Sauny, meere than Hunger and Cawd, Sir; Bo then, Sir, when aw the Footmen ſtan ſtill Sir, and ha nothing to dea, then gees Sauny tul his Paſtime, Scratten and Scrubben.

Pet. Do'ſt call it Paſtime?

Saun. O my Saul de I Sir; I take as Muckle Pleaſure, Sir, in Scratten and Scrubben, as ye de in Tiplin and Mowing.

Pet. Nay, if it be ſo, keep it, and much good may it d' ye. This is my old Friend Geraldo's Lodgings, for whoſe ſake now I am come to Town, I hope he's at home; there Sauny, Knock.

Saun. Wuns, Sir, I ſee nean to Knock bo yer can ſel, Sir.

Pet. Sirrah, I ſay Knock me ſoundly at this Gate.

Saun.

Saun. Out, Out, in the Muccle Deel's Name t' ye; you'l gar me ſtrike ye, and then ye'l put me a-waw, Sir, with ye'r favour Ife ne're do't Sir: Gude an ye ne ken when ye an a gued Man, S'breed I wot when I've a gued Maſter, ye's bang yer Sel for Sauny.

Pet. Rogue, I'll make you underſtand me. [Beats him.

Saun. Gude an ye'd give Sauny ea bang ar twa mere e that place, for I can ne're come at it to Scrat it my ſel Sir.

Pet. Yes, thus, Sir.

Saun. The Dee'l faw yer Fingers, I may not beat yea o' yeer ean Dunghill, Sir, bo gin I had yea in Scotland, Is'e ne give yea a Bawbee for your Luggs.

Enter Geraldo

Ger. How now Sauny, What Crying out? Dear Petruchio, moſt wellcome; When came you to Town? What Quarrel is this 'twixt you and Sauny? I pray let me Compoſe the Difference, and tell me now what happy Gale drove you to Town, and why in this Habit? Why in Mourning?

Pet. A common Calamity to us young Men, my Father has been Dead this four Months.

Ger. Truſt me I am ſorry, a good old Gentleman.

Saun. Gee yer gate Sir, gee yer gate, on ye be ſow a grief ye'r nea Friend, we are blith and bonny, Sir, we nere woe for't.

Pet. Sirrah, you long to be baſted.

Saun. Gud do I not, Sir.

Pet. Hether I come to try my Fortunes, to ſee if good luck and my Friends will help me to a Wife; Will you wiſh me to one?

Ger. What Qualifications do you look for?

Pet. Why Money, a good Portion.

Ger. Is that all?

Pet. All Man? all other things are in my making.

Ger. I ſhall come roundly to you, and wiſh you to a Rich Wife, but her Face———

Pet. That ſhall break no Squares, a Mask will mend it, Wealth is the burthen of my Wooing Song. If ſhe be Rich, I care not if ſhe want a Noſe or an Eye, any thing with Money.

Saun. De ye nea gi him Creedit Sir, I wud a halp't him tul a Highland Lady with Twanty thouſand Pund; Gud he wud nea have her, Sir.

Pet. Sirrah, your Twenty thouſand Pounds Scotch will make but a Pittiful Engliſh Portion.

Saun. Gud Sir, Bo a Muckle deal of Scotch Punds is as gued as a Little deal of Engliſh Punds.

Ger. She has nothing like this, but a thing worſe, ſhe has a Tongue that keep's more Noiſe then all that ever Mov'd at Billingſgate.

Pet. Piſh, a trifle; Where lives ſhe? I long to be Wooing her, let me alone with her Tongue, I'm in Love with the news of it, who is't? Who is't? I'm reſolv'd for Her or Nobody.

Ger. But look before you Leap, Sir, and ſay you were warn'd.

Saun. Out, out, he can nea break his Cragg upon her, Gude an ye'd venter your bonny Laſs, Iſe venter my bonny Lad at her, Sir.

Ger. Her Father is the brave Noble Beaufoy, her Name Margaret, fam'd about Town for a Vixin.

Pet. The Town's an Aſs, come prithee ſhew me the Houſe, I will not ſleep 'till I ſee her, I know her Father. Nay, I am reſolv'd, Man, come prithee come.

Saun. Wun's Man an ſhe be a Scawd, awaw with her, awaw with her, and Johnee Johnſtons Curſe ge with her.

Ger. Prithee what's that?

Saun. That is, the Deel creep into her weem i'th very bottome on't, that's to the Croone, gued faith, of her head.

Ger. Well Sir, if you are reſolv'd, I'll wait on you; to ſay the truth, 'twill be my great Advantage to

for if you win her, I ſhall have liberty to ſee her younger Siſter ſweet Biancha, to whoſe fair Eyes I am a Votary, and you in order to my Love Petruchio muſt help me, I'll tell you why, and how you muſt prefer me as a Muſick-Maſter to old Beaufoy.

Pet. I underſtand you not.

Saun. He'd ha ye mak him her Piper, Sir, gued at ye'd mak Sauny her Piper, wuns Ide ſea blea her Pipe.

Pet. Sirrah be quiet, what I can I'll ſerve you in; But who comes here, Geraldo?

Enter Woodall and Winlove Diſguis'd.

Ger. 'Tis Mr. Woodall, a rich old Citizen, and my Rival: Hark.

Saun. Out, out, What ſud an awd Carle do with a young bonny Laſs, are ye not an aud Theif, Sir.

Wood. How!

Saun. Are ye not an aud Man, Sir?

Wood. Yes marry am I, Sir.

Saun. And are not ye to Marry a young Maiden?

Wood. Yes, what then?

Saun. And are you not troubled with ſear Griefe, Sir?

Wood. A ſear Grief, what ſear Grief,

Saun. You're troubled with a great weakneſs i'th' bottome of your Bally, what ſid yea dea with a young Maiden? Out, out, out.

Wood. You underſtand me, your French Books treat moſt of Love; thoſe uſe her to, and now and then you may urge ſomething of my Love and Merit? beſides her Fathers bounty, you ſhall find me Liberal.

Win. Monſieur, me vill tell her the very fine ting of you, me vill make her Love you wheder ſhe can or no?

Wood. Enough, Peace, here's Geraldo, your Servant Sir, I am juſt going to Sir Nicholas Beaufoy to carry him this Gentleman, a Frenchman, moſt Eminent for teaching his Country Language.

Ger. I have a Master for Biancha too, but waving that, I have some News to tell you, I have found out a Friend that will Woo Margaret, What will you contribute, for he must be hir'd to't?

Wood. Why I will give him forty Pieces in hand, and when he has don't, I'll double the Sum.

Ger. Done, Sir, I'll undertake it.

Saun. S'breed Sir, I'se gat it done muckle Cheaper; for twanty Punds I'se dea it my Sel.

Ger. Come, down with your Money, and the Bargain's made.

Wood. But if he shou'd not do it, I don't care for throwing away so much Money.

Ger. If he don't I'll undertake he shall refund.

Wood. Why then here's ten Pieces, and that Ring I'll pawn to you for 'tother Thirty, 'tis worth a Hundred; But does the Gentleman know her Qualities?

Pet. Yes Sir, and they are such I am fond on; I wou'd not be hir'd for any thing, to Woo a Person of another Humour.

Enter Tranio brave and Jemmy.

Tran. Save you Gentlemen; Pray which is the way to Sir Nicholas Beaufoy's House?

Wood. Why Sir, what's your Business there? You pretend not to be a Servant to either of his Daughters, d'ye?

Tran. You are something blunt in your Questions, perhaps I do.

Pet. Not her that Chides on any hand I pray.

Tran. I Love no Chiders: come Jemmy.

Ger. Pray stay Sir, is it the other?

Tran. May be it is, is it any offence?

Wood. Yes 'tis Sir, she is my Mistress.

Ger. I must tell you Sir, she is my Mistress too.

Tran. And I must tell you both she is my Mistress; Will that content you? nay never frown for the Matter.

Saun.

Saun. And I mun tell ye all, there's little hopes for Saun then.

Win. The Rogue doesit rarely. [Aside.

Pet. Nay, nay, Gentleman, no Quarrelling, unleſs it were to the purpoſe: Have you ſeen this young Lady Sir?

Tran. No Sir; but I'm in Love with her Character. They ſay ſhe has a Siſter moves like a Whirlwind.

Pet. Pray ſpare your Deſcription Sir; that Furious Lady is my Miſtreſs; and till I have Married her, Biancha is Inviſible; her Father has Sworn it, and, till then, you muſt all move Forty foot off.

Tran. I thank you for your Admonition; I ſhould have loſt my Labour elſe; and ſince you are to do all of us the Favour, I ſhall be glad to be numbered among your Servants Sir.

Pet. You will honour me to accept of me for yours. But pray Sir let me know who oblige me with this Civility?

Tran. My Name is Winlove, Sir, a Worſterſhire Gentlemen; where I have ſomething, an Old Man's Death will Intitle me to, not inconſiderable. Come, Gentlemen, let's not fall out, at leaſt till the Fair Biancha's at Liberty; Shall we go ſit out half an Hour at the Tavern, and Drink her Health?

Saun. Do my Bearns; and I'se Drink with ye te Countenance ye.

Pet. Ay, Ay, agreed; Come, and then I'll to my Miſtreſs.

Saun. Gude theſe Lades are o' Saun's Mind, they'l lather tak a Drink, nor Fight. [Exeunt.

Enter Margaret and Biancha.

Marg. Marry come up Proud Slut, Muſt you be making your ſelf Fine before your Elder Siſter? You are the Favourite, you are, but I ſhall make you know your Diſtance; Give me that Necklace, and thoſe Pendants, I'll have that Whisk too, there's an old Hankercheif good enough for you.

Bian.

Bian. Here, take 'em, Sister, I resign 'em freely, I wou'd give you all I have to Purchase your Kindness.

Marg. You Flattering Gypsie, I cou'd find in my Heart to Slit your Dissembling Tongue; Come, tell me and without Lying, which of your Sutors you Love best? Tell me, or I'll beat you to Clouts, and Pinch thee like a Fairy.

Bian. Believe me, Sister, of all Men alive, I never saw that Particular Face which I cou'd Fancy more than another.

Marg. Huswife you Lye; and I could find in my Heart to Dash thy Teeth down thy Throat; I know thou Lov'st Geraldo.

Bian. If you Affect him Sister, I Vow to plead for you my self, but you shall have him.

Marg. O then belike you fancy Riches more, you Love Old Woodall.

Bian. That Old Fool: Nay now I see you but Jested with me all this while; I know you are not angry with me.

Marg. If this be a Jest then all the rest is so: I'll make ye tell me e're I have done with you Gossip.

Enter Beaufoy.

Beau. Why how now Dame, whence grows this Insolence? Biancha get thee in my Poor Girl; She Weeps; Fye Peg, put off this Devilish Humour; Why dost thou Cross thy Tender Innocent Sister? When did she cross thee with a bitter Word?

Marg. Her Silence Flouts me, and I'll be Reveng'd. [Flyes at Biancha.

Beau. What in my sight too? You scurvy Ill-natur'd Thing: Go, poor Biancha, get thee out of her way. [Exit. Bian.

Marg. What will you not suffer me —— nay, now I see she is your Treasure; She must have a Husband; and I Dance Bare-foot on her Wedding-Day: And for your Love to her, lead Apes in Hell. I see your care of me, I'll go and cry till I can find a way to be quit with her. [Exit. Beau.

Beau. Was ever poor Man thus plagu'd?

Enter Woodal with Winlove disguis'd, with Iamy carrying a Lute and Books, and Tranio.

How now, who's here?

Wood. Sir your Servant, I am bold to wait on you to preſent you this Gentleman, an Acute Teacher of the French Tongue, his Name's Monſieur Marogier, pray accept his Service.

Beau. I am your debtor Sir, Monſieur, you're welcome.

Win. Me give you humble thanks Sir.

Beau. But what Gentleman is that?

Wood. I don't love him ſo well to tell you his Errant, but he wou'd come along with me, you had beſt ask him.

Tran. I beg your Pardon for my Intruſion, we heard your Fair and Virtuous Daughter Biancha, prais'd to ſuch a height of Wonder, Fame has already made me her Servant; I've heard your Reſolution not to Match her till her Eldeſt Siſter be beſtow'd, mean while I beg Admittance like the reſt to keep my hopes alive; this Lute Sir, and theſe few French Romances I wou'd Dedicate to her Service.

Beau. Sir you oblige me, Pray your Name?

Tran. 'Tis Winlove, Son and Heir to Sir Lyonel Winlove.

Beau. My noble Friend, he has been my Schoolfellow; for his ſake you are moſt kindly welcome, you ſhall have all the freedom I can give you.

Enter Sauny and Geraldo Diſguis'd.

Saun. Haund in haund, Sir, I'ſe ge tell him my ſel. Whare is this Laird?

Beau. Here, Sir, What wou'd you have, what are you?

Saun. Marry I'ſe can a bonny Scot, Sir.

Beau. A Scotchman, is that all?

Saun. Wun's wud ye have me a Cherub? I ha brought ye a ſmall teaken Sir.

Beau.

Beau. But d'ye hear you Scot, don't you uſe to put off your Cap to your betters?

Saun. Marry we ſay in Scotland Geud Mourn til ye for aw the day, and ſea put on our bonnets again, Sir; bo Sir, I ha brought ye a Teaken.

Beau. To me, where is't; from whence is your Teaken?

Saun. Marry from my good Maſter Petruchio, Sir; he has ſen ye a Piper to teach your Bonny Laſſes to Pipe, but gin yed let Sauny teach 'em? I'ie pipe 'em ſea, Whim——Whum, their Arſes ſhall nere leave giging and joging whilethere's a Tooth in their head.

Beau Petruchio! I remember him now, How does thy Maſter?

Saun. Marry Sir, he means to make ean of your Laſſes his Wanch, that is his Love and his Ligby.

Beau. You are a Sawcy Rogue.

Saun. Gud wull a Sir, he'll tak your Laſs with a Long Tang that the Deel and Sauny wun alventer on, but he's here his aun ſel, Sir.

Enter Petruchio.

Pet. Your moſt humble Servant.

Beau. Noble Petruchio welcome, I thank you for your kindneſs to my Daughters. Within there.

Enter Servant.

Conduct theſe Gentlemen to my Daughters, tell 'em theſe are both to be their Maſters, bid 'em uſe them Civilly; take in that Lute, and thoſe Books there; Petruchio I hear you have loſt your Father lately.

Pet. 'Tis true, but I hope to find another in you; in ſhort I hear you have a fair Daughter call'd Margaret, the World ſays ſhe's a Shrew; But I think otherwiſe, you know my Fortune, if you like my Perſon, with your Conſent, I'll be your Son-in-Law.

Beau. I have ſuch a Daughter, but I ſo much Love you, I would not put her into your hands, ſhe'll make you mad.

Saun.

Saun. Gud he's as mad as heart can wiſh, Sir, he need nea halp, Sir.

Pet. I'll venture it Father, ſo I'll preſume to call you; I'm as Peremptory, as ſhe's Proud-minded: And where two raging Fires meet together they do conſume the thing that feed's their fury; my Father's Eſtate I have better'd; not Imbezell'd, then tell me, if I can get your Daughters Love, what Portion you will give?

Beau. After my Death the Moiety of my Eſtate, and on the Wedding day three Thouſand Pounds.

Pet. And I'll aſſure her Jointure anſwerable; get Writings drawn, I'll warrant you I'll carry the Wench.

Beau. Fair Luck betide you.

Enter Geraldo Bleeding.

How now Man, What's the matter? Will my Daughter be a good Lutaniſt?

Ger. She'll prove a better Cudgel Player, Lutes will not hold her.

Beau. Why then thou canſt not break her to thy Lute.

Ger. No, but ſhe has broke the Lute to me; I did but tell her ſhe miſtook her frets, and bow'd her head to teach her Fingrings, Frets call you theſe, (quoth ſhe) and I'll fret with you, ſo fairly took me o're the Pate with the Lute, and ſet me in the Pillory; and follow'd it with loud Volly's of Rogue, Raſcal, Fidler, Jack, Puppy, and ſuch like.

Pet. Now by the World I Love her ten times more than er'e I did.

Saun. Gud, bo the De'll a bit ye's wad her Sir, Wun's I'ſe nea gi twa Pence for my Luggs gin you make her yer Bride.

Pet. I'll warrant you Sauny, we'll deal with her well enough.

Beau. Well Sir, I'll make you Reparation, proceed ſtill with my youngeſt Daughter, ſhe's apt to Learn;

Learn; Petruchio will you go with us, or ſhall I ſend my Daughter to you?

Pet. Pray do Sir, and I'll attend her here.

[Exeunt. Manet. Pet. Saun.

Saun. Gud at ye gi Saundy a little Siller to gea to Scotland agen.

Pet. Why Sauny, I have not us'd thee ſo unkindly.

Saun. Gud I'ſe nea tarry with a Scauding Quean Sir, yet the Deel faw my Luggs, if Ise ken which is worſe, to tarry and venture my Cragg, or gea heam to Scotland.

Enter Margaret.

Pet. Peace Sirrah, here ſhe comes; now for a Rubbers at Cuffs. O Honey Pretty Peg, how do'ſt thou do Wench?

Marg. Marry come up Ragmanners, Plain Peg? Where were you bred? I am call'd Mrs. Margaret.

Pet. No, no, thou ly'ſt Peg, thou'rt call'd plain Peg, and Bonny Peg, and ſometimes Peg the Curſt, take this from me; Hearing thy Wildneſs prais'd in every Town, thy Virtues Sounded and thy Beauty ſpoke: My ſelf am mov'd to take thee for my Wife.

Marg. I knew at firſt you were a Moveable.

Pet. Why what's a Moveable.

Marg. A Joint Stool.

Pet. Thou haſt hit it Peg, come ſit upon me.

Marg. Aſſes were made to bear, and ſo were you.

Pet. Why now I ſee the World has much abus'd thee, 'twas told me thou wert rough and Coy, and Sullen, but I do find thee pleaſant, Mild and Curteous; Thou can'ſt not Frown, nor Pout, nor bite the Lip as angry Wenches do. Thou art all ſweetneſs.

Marg. Do not provoke me, I won't ſtand ſtill and here my ſelf abus'd.

Pet. What a Rogue was He that told me thou wert Lame, thou art as ſtreight as an Oſier and as plyable; O what a rare Walk's there! why there's a gate puts puts down the King of France's beſt great Horſe.

Saun. And the King o' Scotland's tea.

Pet. Where did'ſt thou learn the grand Paw Peg? It becomes thee rarely.

Marg. Does it ſo Sawcebox? How will a Halter become you with a running Knot under one Ear?

Pet. Nay, no Knot Peg, but the Knot of Matrimony 'twixt Thee and Me, we ſhall be an Excellent Mad Couple well match'd.

Marg. I match'd to Thee! what to ſuch a Fellow with ſuch a Gridiron Face; with a Noſe ſet on like a Candle's End ſtuck againſt a Mud Wall; and a Mouth to eat Milk-Porridge with Ladles! Foh, it almoſt turns my Stomach to look on't.

Saun. Gud an your Stomach wamble to ſee his Face, What will ye dea when ye ſee his Arſe, Madam.

Marg. Marry come up Abberdeen, take that, [hits him a Box on the Ear.] and ſpeak next when it comes to your Turn.

Saun. S'breed the Deel tak a Gripe o' yer faw Fingers and Driſs your Doublat for ye.

Pet. Take heed Peg, Sauny's a deſperate Fellow.

Marg. You'r a Couple of Logger-Heads, Maſter and Man, that I can tell you.

Pet. Nay, nay, ſtay Peg, for all this I do like thee, and I mean to have thee, in Truth I am thy Servant.

Marg. Are you, why then I'll give you a Favour, and thus I'll tye it on, there's for you. [beats him.

Saun. Out, out, I'se gea for Scotland, Gud an ſhe beat ye Sauny's a dead Man.

Pet. I'll ſwear I'll cuff you, if you ſtrike agen.

Marg. That's the way to looſe your Arms, if you ſtrike a Woman, you are no Gentleman.

Pet. A Herald Peg? Prithee Blazen my Coat.

Marg. I know not your Coat, but your Creſt is a Coxcomb. [Offers to go away.

Pet. Stop her Sirrah, ſtop her.

Saun. Let her gea her gate Sir, an e'n twa Deels and a Scotch Wutch, blaw her Weeme full of Wind.

Pet. Stay

Pet. Stay her, Sirrah, ſtay her, I ſay.

Saun. S'breed Sir, ſtay her yer ſen, but hear ye Sir, an her tale gea as faſt as her tang, Gud ye ha meet with a Whupſter, Sir.

Pet. Prithee Peg ſtay, and I'll talk to thee in earneſt.

Marg. You may pump long enough er'e you get out a wiſe Word; get a Night-Cap to keep your Brains warm.

Pet. I mean thou ſhalt keep me warm in thy Bed Peg, What think'ſt thou of that, Peg? In plain Terms, without more ado, I have your Father's Conſent, your Portion's agreed upon, your Joynture ſettled; and for your own part, be willing or unwilling all's one, you I will marry, I am reſolv'd on't.

Marg. Marry come up Jack-a-Lent, without my Leave?

Pet. A Ruſh for your Leave, here's a Clutter with a troubleſom Woman, reſt you contented, I'll have it ſo.

Marg. You ſhall be bak'd firſt, you ſhall; within there, ha!

Pet. Hold, get me a Stick there Sauny; by this Hand, deny to Promiſe before your Father, I'll not leave you a whole Rib, I'll make you do't and be glad on't.

Marg. Why you will not Murder me Sirrah? You are a Couple of Raſcals, I don't think but you have pickt my Pockets.

Saun. I'se ſooner pick your Tang out o' your Head, nor pick your Pocket.

Pet. Come leave your idle Prating, have you I will, or no Man ever ſhall; whoever elſe attempts it his Throat I'll cut, before he lies one Night with thee, it may be thine too for Company; I am the Man am born to tame thee Peg.

Enter Beaufoy, Woodal and Tranio.

Here comes your Father, never make denial, if you do, you know what follows. Marg. The Marg. The Devil's in this Fellow, he has beat me at my own Weapon; I have a good mind to marry him to try if he can tame me.

Beau. Now, Petruchio, how ſpeed you with my Daughter?

Pet. How but well, it were impoſſible I ſhou'd ſpeed amiſs, 'tis the beſt natur'd'ſt Lady ———

Beau. Why how now Daughter, in your Dumps?

Marg You ſhew a Father's Care indeed to Match me with this mad hectoring Fellow.

Pet. She has been abus'd, Father, moſt unworthily, ſhe is not Curſt unleſs for Pollicy; for Patience, a ſecond Grizel; betwixt us we have ſo agreed, the Wedding is to be on Thurſday next.

Saun. Gud Sauny's gea for Scotland a Tueſday then.

Wood. Hark Petruchio, ſhe ſays ſhe'll ſee you hang'd firſt, is this your ſpeeding? I ſhall make you refund.

Pet. Piſh, that's but a way ſhe has gotten, I have Woo'd her, Won her, and ſhe's my own; we have made a Bargain that before Company ſhe ſhall maintain a little of her extravagant Humour, for ſhe muſt not ſeem to fall off from't too ſoon; when we are alone, we are the kindeſt, loving'ſt, tender'ſt Chickins to one another! Pray Father provide the Feaſt, and bid the Gueſts, I muſt home to ſettle ſome things, and fetch ſome Writings in order to her Joynture. —— Farewel Gallants, give me thy Hand Peg.

Beau. I know not what to ſay, but give me your Hands, ſend you Joy; Petruchio, 'tis a Match.

Wood. Tran. Amen, ſay we, we all are Witneſſes.

Marg. Why Sir, de' ye mean to match me in ſpite of my Teeth?

Pet. Nay, peace, Peg, peace, thou need'ſt not be peeviſh before theſe, 'tis only before Strangers, according to our Bargain: Come Peg, thou ſhalt go ſee me take Horſe, farewel Father.

Marg. As I live I will not.

Pet. By

Pet. By this Light but you ſhall; nay, no teſty Tricks, away. Exeunt.

Saun. Gud I'se be your Lieutenant and bring up your Reer, Madam. [Exit.

Wood Was ever Match clapt up ſo ſuddenly?

Beau. Faith, Gentlemen, I have ventur'd madly on a diſperate Mart.

Wood. But now Sir, as to your younger Daughter, you may remember my long Love and Service.

Tran. I hope I may (without Arrogance Sir,) beg you to look on me as a Perſon of more Merit.

Beau. Content ye Gentlemen, I'll compound this Strife, 'tis Deeds, not Words, muſt win the Prize; I love you both, but he that can aſſure my Daughter the nobleſt Joynture has her, What ſay you Sir?

Wood. I'll make it out my Eſtate is worth De clara, full twenty Thouſand Pounds, beſides ſome Ventures at Sea, and all I have, at my Deceaſe I give her.

Tran. Is that all Sir? Alas, 'tis too Light Sir, I am my Father's Heir, and only Son, and his Eſtate is worth three Thouſand Pound per Annum; that will afford a Joynture anſwerable to her Portion; no Debts, nor Incumbrances, no Portions to be paid—have I nip'd you, Sir.

Beau. I muſt confeſs your Offer is the beſt, and let your Father make her this Aſſurance, ſhe is your own, elſe you muſt pardon me, if you ſhould die before him, where's her Power?

Tran. That's but a Cavel, he's old, I young.

Wood. And may not young Men die as well as old, have I nip'd you there again?

Beau. Well, Gentlemen, I am thus reſolv'd, on Thurſday my Daughter Peg is to be married; the Thurſday following Biancha's yours, if you make this Aſſurance; if not, Mr. Woodall has her; and ſo I take my Leave, and thank you both. [Exit.

Wood. Sir, your Servant; now I fear you not: Alas, young Man, your Father is not ſuch a Fool, to give you all, and in his waining Age, ſet Footing under your Table; you may go whiſtle for your Miſtreſs, ha, ha, ha. [Exit.

Tranio. A Vengeance on your crafty wither'd Hide. Yet 'tis in my Head to do my Maſter good: I ſee no Reaſon why this ſuppos'd young Winlove ſhould not get a ſuppos'd Father, call'd, Sir Lyonell Winlove, and that's a Wonder, Fathers commonly get Children, but here the Caſe muſt be alter'd.

Love brings ſuch Prodigies as theſe to Town,
For that, at beſt, turns all things upſide down.

[Exit.

ACT III.

Enter Winlove, Geraldo, Biancha. A Table cover'd with Velvet, two Chairs and Guittar. A Paper prick'd with SONGS.

Geral. PRAY, Madam, will you take out this Leſſon on the Guittar.

Win. Here be de ver fine Story in de Varld of Monſieur Apollo, and Madamoſelle Daphne; Me vill read you dat, Madam.

Geral. Good Madam, mind not that Monſieur Shorthoſe; but learn this Leſſon firſt.

Win. Begar Monſieur Fideler, you be de vera fine troubleſome Fellow, me vil make de great Hole in your Head wid de Guittar, as Margaret did.

Geral. This is no Place to quarrel in: But remember——

Bian. Why, Gentlemen, you do me double Wrong, to ſtrive for that which reſteth in my bare Choice: To end the Quarrel, ſit down and tune your Inſtrument, and by that time his Lecture will be done.

Geral. You'll leave his Lecture when I am in Tune.

Bian. Yes,

Bian. Yes, yes; Pray be ſatisfied: Come, Monſieur, let's ſee your Ode.

Win. I do ſuſpect that Fellow. Sure he's no Lute-Maſter. [Aſide.

Bian. Here's the Place.

Win. Come Read. [She Reads.

Bian Do not believe I am a Frenchman, my Name is Winlove; he that bears my Name about the Town, is my Man Tranio. I am your paſſionate Servant, and muſt live by your Smiles. Therefore be ſo good, to give Life to my Hopes.

Geral. Madam, your Guittar is in Tune.

Bian. Let's hear; fie, there's a String ſplit.

Win. Make de Spit in the Hole, Man, and Tune it again.

Bian. Now let me ſee. I know not how to believe you. But if it be true, Noble Mr. Winlove deſerves to belov'd; and, in the mean time, keep your own Council; and it is not impoſſible but your Hopes may be converted into Certainties.

Geral. Madam, now 'tis perfectly in Tune.

Win. Fie, fie, Begar no Tune at all.

Bian. Now, Sir, I am for you.

Geral. Monſieur, pray walk now, and give me leave a while, my Leſſon will make no Muſick in Three Parts.

Win. Me vil no trouble you, Monſieur Fiddeler. I am confident it is ſo, this muſt be ſome Perſon that has taken a Diſguiſe, like me, to Court Biancha; I'll watch him. [Aſide.

Geral. Firſt, Madam, be pleas'd to ſing the laſt Song that I taught you, and then we'll proceed.

Bian I'll try, but I'm afraid I ſhall be out.

SONG.

Geral. Madam, before you proceed any farther, there are ſome few Rules ſet down in this Paper, in order to your Fingering, will be worth your Peruſal.

Brian. Let's ſee. [Reads.

Tho'

Tho' I appear a Lute-Maſter, yet know my fair Biancha, I have but taken this Diſguiſe to get Acceſs to you, and tell you I am your humble Servant, and paſſionate Admirer, Geraldo. Piſh, take your Rules again, I like 'em not, the old way pleaſes me beſt, I do not care for changing old Rules, for theſe fooliſh new Inventions.

Enter Servant.

Serv. Madam, my Lord calls for you to help dreſs the Bride.

Bian. Farewel then Maſter, I muſt be gone [Ex.

Ger. I know not what to think of her; this fellow looks as if he were in Love, and ſhe careſſes him. Theſe damn'd French-Men have got all the Trade in Town; if they get up all the handſom Women, the Engliſh muſt e'en march into Wales for Miſtreſſes; well, if thy Thoughts, Biancha, are grown ſo low, to caſt thy wandring Eyes on ſuch a Kickſhaw, I'm reſolv'd to ply my Widow. [Exit.

Win. I am glad I'm rid of him, that I may ſpeak my Mother-Tongue agen, Biancha has given me Hopes, I dare half believe ſhe loves me.

Enter Beaufoy, Woodal, Tranio, Margaret, Biancha, and Attendants.

But here's her Father.

Beau. Believe me, Gentlemen, 'tis very ſtrange! This Day Petruchio appointed, yet he comes not; methinks he ſhou'd be more a Gentleman, then to put ſuch a Slur upon my Family.

Marg. Nay, you have us'd me finely, and like a Father; I muſt be forc'd to give my Hand againſt my Will, to a rude mad-brain'd Fellow here; who Woo'd in haſte, and means to Wed at Leiſure. This comes of obeying you, if I'd do't again, were you ten thouſand Fathers, hang me.

Tran. Be patient, Madam, on my Life he'll come; though he be blunt and merry, I'm ſure he's noble; good good Madam, go put on your Wedding Cloaths, I know he'll be with you e're you 're dreſs'd.

Marg. Wedding Cloaths, I'll ſee him hang'd before I'll have him, unleſs it be to ſcratch his Eyes out. [Exit weeping.

Beau. Poor Girl! I cannot blame thee now to weep, for ſuch an Injury wou'd vex a Saint; tho' I am old, I ſhall find ſome Body will call him to a ſtrict Account for this.

Enter Jemy.

Jem. O Maſter, News! News! and ſuch News as you never heard of.

Beau. Why what News have you, Sir?

Jem. Is't not News to hear of Petruchio's Coming?

Beau. Why, is he come?

Jem. Why, no my Lord.

Beau. What then, Sirrah?

Jem. He's coming, Sir.

Beau. When will he be here?

Jem. When he ſtands where I am and ſees you there.

Beau. Well, Sirrah, is this all the News?

Jem. Why Petruchio is coming in a new Hat, and an old Jerkin, a pair of Breeches thrice turn'd, a Pair of Boots that have been Candle-caſes; an old ruſty Sword with a broken Hilt, and never a Chape, upon an old Lean, Lame, Spavin'd, Glander'd, Broken-winded Jade, with a Woman's Crupper of Velvit, here and there peic'd with Packthread.

Tran. Who comes with him?

Jem. O Sir, his Man Sauny, and in an Equipage very ſuitable to his Maſter; he looks no more like a Chriſtian-Footman, than I look like a Windmill.

Wood. This is a moſt ſtrange extravagant Humour.

Beau. I'm glad he comes, however he be!

Enter Petruchio and Sauny ſtrangely Habited.

Pet. Come, where are theſe Gallants, who's at Hbme?

Beau. You're

Beau. You're welcome, Sir, I'm glad you're come at laſt

Tran. I think I have ſeen you in better Cloaths.

Pet. Never, never, Sir, this is my Wedding-ſuit; Why, how now, how now, Gentlemen, What d'ye ſtare at, d'ye take me for a Monſter?

Wood. Faith, in that Habit you might paſs for one in the Fair

Pet. O, you talk merrily, my Taylor tells me it is the neweſt Faſhion: But where's my Peg? I ſtay too long from her, the Morning wears, 'tis time we were at Church.

Tran. Why you won't viſit her thus.

Pet. Marry, but I will.

Saun. And ſea will Sauny tea, Sir.

Beau. But you will not Marry her ſo, will you?

Saun. A my Saul ſal he Sir.

Pet. To me ſhe's Married, not to my Cloaths; Will ye along Father and Gentlemen? I'll go to Church immediately, not tarry a Minute.

Saun. Here ye Sir, ye ſal Marry her after the Scotch Directory, then gin ye like her not, ye maw put her awaw; How ſay ye now? [Exit. Pet. and Saun.

Tran. He has ſome Meaning in this mad Attire, but you muſt perſwade him to put on a better, e're he goes to Church.

Beau. Let's after and ſee what will become of it. [Exit.

Tran. Well, Sir, you find there's no other way, 'tis too ſhort Warning to get your Father up; ſhou'd you ſteal the Match, who knows but both the old Fools wou'd ſo deeply reſent it to your Prejudice.

Win. Why, prithee this way it will be ſtolen, for 'tis but a Cheat, which will be in a little time diſcover'd.

Tran. That's all one, it carries a better Face, and we ſhall have the more Sport; beſides, e're it comes out, your Father may be wrought to like it, and confirm my Promiſes; ſhe is ſuitable to you every way, and ſhe is rich enough to do it, and loves you well enough beſides.

Win. Well, if it muſt be ſo, let's contrive it handſomly.

Tran. Let me alone, Jemmy ſhall do the Buſineſs, he ſhall find out ſome Knight of the Poſt, that ſhall be old Sir Lyonel Winlove here, and make Aſſurance of a greater Joynture than I propos'd; ne'er fear it, Sir, I'll ſo inſtruct him, it ſhall be carried without the leaſt Suſpicion.

Win. Ay, but you know old Beaufoy knows my Father.

Tran. That's nothing, 'tis ſo many Years ſince he ſaw him, he will never diſtinguiſh him by his Face.

Win. This may be done; but notwithſtanding all, did not my fellow Teacher, that damn'd Lute-Maſter, ſo nearly watch us, 'twou'd not be amiſs to ſteal a Marriage, and that once perform'd, let all the World ſay no, I'll keep my own.

Tran. That we may think on too; this ſame Lute-Maſter I more than half ſuſpect.

Win. And ſo do I.

Tran. I have miſs'd a Gentleman out of the Gang a good while; but let that paſs, I have already ſent Jemmy to find a Man.

Enter Woodall.

To our Poſtures, here's Mr. Woodall, he muſt be chous'd too among the reſt. Save you, Sir; came you from the Church?

Wood. As willingly as e'er I came from School.

Tran. And is the Bride and Bridegroom coming home.

Wood. A Bridegroom! Why he's a Bridegroom for the Devil, a Devil, a very Fiend.

Tran. Why ſhe's a Devil, an errant Devil; nay, the Devil's Dam.

Wood. But ſhe's a Lamb, a Dove, a Child to him: When the Prieſt ask'd if he would take Margaret for his his Wife, I by Gods Wounds, quoth he, and ſwore ſo loud! that all amaz'd, the Prieſt let fall the Book; and as the Sexton ſtoop'd to take it up, this mad-brain'd Bridegroom took him ſuch a Cuff, that down fell Sexton, Book, and all again; now take it up quoth he if any liſt.

Tran. What ſaid the poor Bride to this?

Wood. Trembled and ſhook like an Aſpen-Leaf; after this, juſt as the Parſon joyn'd their Hands, he call'd to his Roguiſh Scotchman, for a Glaſs of Muſcadine, drank his Wives Health, and threw the Toaſt in the Clark's Face, becauſe his Beard grew thin and hungry, then took the Bride about the Neck and gave her ſuch a Smack the Church eccho'd again; the Sight of this made me run away for ſhame. I know they are following by this time; but hark, I hear the Minſtrels. [Muſick.

Enter Beaufoy, Petruchio, Margaret, Biancha, Geraldo, Sauny, &c.

Pet. Gentlemen and Friends, I thank you for your Pains, I know you think to Dine with me to Day, and have prepar'd great Store of Wedding Chear; but ſo it is, grand Buſineſs calls me hence, and I muſt take my Leave.

Beau. Is't poſſible you will away to Night?

Pet. I muſt immediately, if you knew my Buſineſs you wou'd not wonder: Well, honeſt Gentlemen, I thank you all, that have beheld me give away my ſelf to this moſt patient, ſweet and vertuous Wife; Dine with my Father here, and drink my Health, for I muſt hence; ſo farewel to you all.

Saun. Wun's will ye nea eat your Wadden Dunner, Sir?

Tran. Let us intreat you to ſtay 'till after Dinner.

Pet. It muſt not be.

Marg. Let me intreat you.

Pet. That will do much, I am content.

Marg. Are you content to ſtay?

Pet. I am content you ſhou'd intreat me, but yet I will not ſtay intreat me how you can.

Marg. Now if you love me ſtay.

Pet. I cannot, Sauny the Horſes.

Saun. They have nea ea't their Wadden Dunner yet.

Pet. Sirrah, get the Horſes.

Marg. Nay then do what thou canſt, I won't go to Day, nor to Morrow, nor 'till I pleaſe my ſelf. The Door is open, Sir, there lies your Way, you may be jogging while your Boots be green.

Pet. O Peg content thee, prithee be not angry.

Marg. I will be angry, What haſt thou to do? Father be quiet, he ſhall ſtay my Leaſure.

Wood. Ay marry Sir, now it begins to work.

Marg. Gentlemen, forward to the Bridal Dinner; I ſee a Woman may be made a Fool of, if ſhe want Spirit to reſiſt.

Pet. They ſhall go forward Peg at thy Command; obey the Bride, you that attend on her. Go to the Feaſt, Revel, Carouſe, and Dance, be Mad or Merry, or go hang your ſelves, but for my Bonny Peg, ſhe muſt with me; nay look not big upon't, nor ſtamp, nor ſtare, nor fret; Come, come, gently, ſo, ſo, ſo, that's my good Peg, I will be Maſter of my own; ſhe is my proper Goods and Chattels; my Houſe, my Ox, my Aſs, my any thing: Look here ſhe ſtands, touch her who dare, I'll make him ſmoak that offers to ſtop me in my Way. Sauny, unſheath thy Dudgeon Dagger, we are beſet with Thieves, reſcue thy Miſtreſs if thou art a Man; fear not ſweet Wench, I'll Buckler thee againſt a Million; nay, come.

Marg. Will none of you help me?

Saun. The Deel a bit of Dunner ye gat, Gud 'at ye woud ſpeak to your Cuke to gi Saundy a little Mutton and Porridge to put in his Wallet.

{ Exeunt. Pet. Marg. Saun.

Beau. Nay let 'em go, a Couple of quiet ones.

Tran. Never was ſo mad a Match.

Beau. Well,

Beau. Well, Gentlemen, let's in, we have a Dinner, although we want a Bride and Bridegroom to it; Biancha you ſhall take your Siſter's Room, and Mr. Winlove, you may practiſe for a Bridegroom.

[Exeunt.

Wood. Monſieur, how do ye find my Miſtreſs inclin'd?

Win. Me can no tell dat yet, but in t me Monſieur ſal inform you.

Wood. Pray ply her cloſe, here's ſomething for you.

[Exit Woodall.

Win. Me tank you, Sir; Ha, ha, ha, I muſt go tell this to my Biancha. [Exit. Winlove.

Tran. Hark ye Sir, you may inform me. Pray what think you, does Madam Biancha fancy any other but my ſelf? ſhe bears me fair in Hand: Pray diſcover, Sir? I ſhall not be ungrateful.

Ger. Troth, Sir, I think ſhe's as all other Women are.

Tran. How is that pray?

Ger. Why, fickle and fooliſh.

Tran. Why d'ye think ſo of her? She was always held diſcreet.

Ger. No ſober Man will think ſo: I tell you, Sir, ſhe cares neither for you, nor any Man that's worth caring for; ſhe's fallen in Love with a Monſieur Jackdaw; a Fellow that teaches bad French, in worſe Engliſh.

Tran. That Fellow! why, 'tis impoſſible

Ger. 'Tis true tho'.

Tran. Why, I am confident he was Imploy'd by old Woodall as his Inſtrument to Court her for him.

Ger. If he were, he has ſpoken one Word for him, and two for himſelf.

Enter Winlove leading Biancha.

See here they come Hand in Hand; ſtand cloſe, perhaps your Eyes may convince you.

Win. Madam, you need not doubt my Paſſion; by thoſe fair Eyes I ſwear (an Oath inviolable) you have made a Conqueſt over me ſo abſolute, that I muſt die your Captive.

Tran. What does he ſay? What does he ſay?

Ger. I cannot hear, liſten.

Bian. I muſt believe you Sir, there's ſome ſtrange Power attends your Words, your attractive Actions, and your Perſon, which is too ſtrong for my weak Reſiſtance; you have won, but do not boaſt your Victory.

Tran. Nay then I ſee 'tis ſo, I cannot hold! Madam, you muſt forgive my Interruption, you have us'd me kindly, fool'd me with fine Hopes, your Monſieur there has read excellent Leſſons to you.

Bian. Sir, I underſtand you not.

Ger. That is, you won't.

Win. What be de Matter, Monſieur Fidler?

Ger. No Fidler, nor no Lutaniſt, Monſieur; no Point, but one that ſcorns to live in a Diſguiſe; for ſuch a one as leaves a Gentleman, to doat upon a Pardonnez-moy, Jack-pudding; know, I am a Gentleman, my Name Geraldo.

Bian. Alas, Sir; And have you been my Maſter all this while, and I never knew it?

Gera. Yes, ſweet Lady, you did know it; I ſee you have a little Spice of Peg in you: But I have done with you; Mr. Winlove, pray tell me, Don't you hate this Gentlewoman now?

Tran. I cannot ſay I hate her; but I'm ſure I don't love her for this Day's Work; wou'd ſhe Court me, I ſwear I wou'd not have her.

Gera. Nor I, by Heavens: I have ſworn, and will keep my Oath.

Bian. Why, Gentlemen, I hope you will not both give the Willow-Garland.

Gera. Go, go, you are a ſcurvy Woman; I have a Widow that has lov'd me as long as I have lov'd you. Sweet Lady, I am not Bankrupt for a Miſtreſs: 'Tis

'Tis true, ſhe's ſomething of your Siſter's Humour, a little Way-ward; but one three Days Time at the Taming-School, will make her vye with any Wife in England. And then I can paſs by you unconcern'd.

Bian. The Taming-School! For Heavens-ſake, where is that, Sir?

Gera. Why your Brother Petruchio's Houſe: I doubt you muſt there too, e're you'll be good for any thing; I'll to him immediately: Farewel thou vile Woman. [Exit.

Bian. Ha, ha, ha, this is excellent.

Tran. Madam, I beg your Pardon; but I hope my Boldneſs with you, has done my Maſter ſome Service.

Win. Believe me it has Tranio, and I muſt thank thee.

Enter Jemmy.

Now, Sirrah, Whither away in ſuch haſt?

Jem. O, Maſter, I have found him.

Win. What? Who haſt thou found?

Jem. A rare old Sinner in the Temple-Cloyſters will do the Feat to a Hair.

Bian. What Feat? What's to be done?

Win. That which I told you of my Faireſt: Where is he?

Jem. Here, here he walks in the Court.

Bian. Well, I muſt in, or I ſhall be miſs'd: Carry the Matter handſomly, and let me not ſuffer. [Exit.

Win. Fear not, Madam; call him in, Tranio You muſt inſtruct him; I'll not be ſeen in't. [Exit.

Enter Jemmy and Snatchpenny.

Tran. Now Friend, What are you?

Snatch. Any thing that you pleaſe, Sir.

Tran. Any thing: Why, what can you do?

Snatch. Any thing, for ſo much as concerns Swearing and Lying to your Worſhip's Service, and to get an honeſt Livelyhood, ſo pleaſe you to employ me.

Tran. Why thou may'ſt ſerve turn I think; But I'll put thee to no Swearing, bare Lying and Impudence will ſerve for my Occaſion; You muſt bate of the Price for that.

Snatch. Faith, Sir, they're both of a Price, take 'em or leave 'em.

Tran. But canſt thou Manage and Carry off a good well-contriv'd Lye, to the beſt Advantage?

Snatch. I ſhould be very ſorry elſe: it has been my Trade theſe Seven and Thirty Years, never fear it Sir.

Jem. Nay, I pickt him out amongſt half a Score; I fancy'd he had the beſt lying Face amongſt 'em.

Tran. Well, come along with me, and I'll Inſtruct you; But if you fail, look to your Ears, if you have any.

Snatch. I'll venture Neck and all to do it Sir. [Exit.

Enter Sauny and Curtis ſeverally. Petruchio's Houſe.

Curt. Honeſt Sauny, Welcome, Welcome.

Saun. Sauny's Hungry; Can't you get a little Meat, Sir?

Cur. Yes, yes, Sauny.

Saun. Ye mun gat a geud Fire, Sir? Mrs. Bride has gat a faw intul a Dike, She's aw wet Sir; Gud ſhe has not a dry thread to her Arſe, Curt. Is Maſter and Miſtreſs coming Sauny?

Saun. Gud are they, gin they be nea frozen to the grund, bo whare's your Fire, Man?

Curt. 'Tis making, 'tis making, all things are ready; Prithee what News good Sauny, what kind of Woman is our Miſtreſs?

Saun. Ken ye twa twanty Deels Sir.

Curt. Marry Heaven defend us.

Saun. Gud ſhee has ean twa twanty Deels I'ſe nea bate ye ean of 'em.

Curt. They ſay ſhe's a cruel Shrew.

Saun.

Saun. O my ſaul Sir, I'ſe haud a thouſand Pund, ſhe's ſet up her Tang, and Scaud fro Edingbrough to London, and nere draw bit for't.

Curt. What ſhall we do then, there will be no living for us.

Saun. Gud will there not, Wun's I think the Deel has flead off her Skin, and put his Dam intul't; Bo where's Philip and George and Gregory.

Curt. They're all ready, what ho, come forth here, Philip, George, Joſeph, Nick, where are you?

Enter 4 or 5 Serving-Men.

Philip. Honeſt Sanny, Welcome home.

Saun. Gat me ſome Meat, and I'll believe ye Sir.

Geor. I am glad to ſee thee Sauny.

Saun. Gat me a Drink, and I'ſe believe ye tea.

Joſeph. What, Sauny come to Town again, Welcome?

Saun. Wuh's, Walcome, walcome, gat me geud Meat and Drink, that is Walcome, Sir.

Nick. Old luſty Fellow Sauny, Welcome.

Saun. How d'ye Wully?

Nick. D'ye hear the News, Sauny? Wully Watts is Dead.

Saun. S'blead, nea Man that geas on twa Leggs cou'd ſlay Wully Watts, Sir.

Nick. True; for he was fairly Hang'd.

Saun. I was ſure nea Man that went on twa Leggs cou'd ſlay him.

Nick. You are in the right Sauny, for 't was one with Three Leggs, 'twas Mr. Tyburn, for he was fairly Hang'd.

Saun. S'blead ye Lye, Sir, the Gallows m'ght kill him, and break his ſtout heart, but it cou'd nea hang him: 'Tis hang an Engliſh Man.

Nick. Well, But what kind of Woman is our Miſtreſs, Sauny.

Saun. You'l ken ſoon enough 'tea your Sorrow, and wea Sir; Ye've aw twa Luggs apiece o'your

Head: A my Saul I'se nea gea ye twa Pennys for them by'th' Morn: How ſay ye now?

Enter Petruchio and Margaret.

Pet. Where are theſe Idle Rogues? What no more at Door to hold my Stirrup, or take my Horſes? Where's Curtis, Philip, Nick and Gregory?

All. Here, Here, Here, Sir.

Pet. Here, here, here, you Loggerhead Currs; What, no Attendance, no Regard, no Duty? Where's that Fooliſh Knave I ſent before.

Saun. Wuns, Sir, I'se be ſea hungry, and ſea empty, ye may travel quite through me, and nere ſaw your fingers Sir.

Pet. You Mangy Rogue, Did not I bid you meet me in the Park, and bring theſe Raſcals with you?

Saun. Gud did ye Sir; bo Ise ſea hungry, Ise ha nea Memory, Deliver your Meſſage your ſel, Sir.

Pet. Be gone you Slaves, and fetch my Supper in; Rogues do I ſpeak, and don't you fly to make haſt. [Exit 2 or 3 Servants. Sit down Peg and Welcome. Why when I Pray, nay good ſweet Peg be Merry, Theſe are Country Clowniſh Fellows; Prithee be Merry: Off with my Boots, Sirrah, you Rogues, ye Villains. When

SINGS.

It was the Orders of the Fryar Gray,
As forth he walked on his Way.

Marg. Sure he will run himſelf out of Breath, and then it will be my turn.

Petru. Out you Rogue; You pluck my Boot awry; take that, (Boxes him.) and mend it in pulling off the other. Be Merry Peg. Some Water here, ho; Where's my Spannel, Sirrah? Make haſt and deſire my Couſin Ferdinand to come hither, one, Peg you muſt Kiſs, and be acquainted with: Where are my Slippers? Shall I have ſome Water. Come, Peg, waſh and welcome heartily. Saun.

Saun. Wuns bo whare is the Meat to mack her walcome.

Marg. We ſhall fall out if we waſh together.

Petru. You Whoreſon Villain will you let it fall?

Marg. Pray Sir be Patient, 'twas an unwilling Fault.

Table Cover'd. Enter Servants with Meat.

Pet. An Idle, Careleſs, Beettle-headed-Slave. Come, Peg, ſit down. I know you have a Stomach. Will you give Thanks, Sweet Peg, or ſhall I? Or each for our ſelves? Come, fall to, What's this, Mutton?

Saun. Gud is it, Sir.

Pet. Who bought it?

Cur. I did Sir.

Pet. You Raſcal you, 'tis not Mutton, 'tis the Breaſt of a Dog. What Currs are theſe? 'tis dry'd and burn't to a Coal too, Where is this Raſcal Cook? How dare you bring ſuch rotten Meat to my Table? What d'ye mean to Poyſon me, ye heedleſs Jolt-heads? ye ill manner'd Whelps, what d'ye grumble? I'll be with you ſtrait.

Marg. Pray Husband be content, the Meat is good Meat; and I am very hungry, I muſt and will eat ſome of it.

Pet. Not for the World Peg, I Love thee better then ſo; 'Tis burnt and will ingender Choller, a Diſeaſe we are both too Subject to; I love thee too well to give thee any thing to hurt thee, we'll faſt to Night, to Morrow we'll make it up.

Marg. Say what you will Sir, I'll eat ſome of it; Did you bring me hither to Starve me?

Pet. Why ye Raſcals will ye ſtand Still and ſee your Miſtreſs Poyſon her ſelf? take it away out of her ſight, quickly. [Throws the Meat at 'em, Sauny gets it.]

Saun. Gud Sauny will venture, Poyſon and 'twill.

Pet.

Pet. Well Peg, this Night we'll faſt for Company; Come, I'll bring thee to the Bridal Chamber.

Marg. I muſt eat ſomething, I ſhall be Sick elſe; But an Egg.

Pet. No, no, Prithee don't talk on't; to Bed upon a full Stomach!

Marg. But a Cruſt of Bread.

Pet. To morrow, to morrow; Come prithee away, [Exeunt.

Geor. Did'ſt ever ſee the like?

Curt. He kills her in her own Humour.

Phil. Have you ſaid Grace Sauny?

Saun. Gud I was ſea hungry, I forgot Grace. O thou that haſt fill'd our Boyes, and our blathers, keep us aw from Whoredom, and Secrecy.

Nick. Secrecy? why Sauny?

Saun. Wuns Man, it is Wutchcraft, Peace, you put me out with the Deel's name to ye: Keep us aw from Whoredom and Secrecy, fro the Dinger o' the ſwatch to the gallow Tree, keep us aw we beſeech thee. take a Drink Man.

Phil. Are ye full now Sauny?

Sau. As fow as a Piper, ye may put ean finger in at my Mouth, and another in mine Arſe, and feel beath ends o' my Dinner. [Exeunt.

Enter as in a Bed-Chamber, Petruchio, Peg, Servants and Sauny.

Pet. Where are you, you Rogues? Some Lights there; come Peg undreſs, to Bed, to Bed.

Marg. Pray ſend your Men away, and call for ſome of your Maids.

Pet. Maids, hang Maids, I have no ſuch vermine about my Houſe, any of theſe will do as well; Here Sauny come hither Sirrah, and undreſs your Miſtreſs.

Saun. O my Saul Sir, I'ſe put on my head-piece; now, an ye'll bind her hands behind her, I'ſe undreſs her. [Goes to take up her Coats.

Pet. What doſt thou do?

Saun.

Saun. In Scotland we awayes begin at the nether end of a bonny Lafs.

Pet. Who made this Bed? What Rafcals are thefe? Foh! thefe Sheets are Mufty as the Devil, and what Rags are here upon my Bed? Is this a Counterpan? 'tis a Difhclout.

Marg. Why the Counterpan is well enough, and Rich enough, and the Sheet's are as Clean, as may be.

Pet. Fye, fye Peg, thou haft got a Cold, and loft thy Smelling, I tell thee they are all Damp and Mufty, I wou'd not have thee venture to Lye in 'em for the World, it wou'd be thy Death; here take 'em away, we muft e'en fit up, there's no remedy.

Marg. Pray Sir talk not of fitting up, I am fo fleepy I can't hold my Eyes open, I muft to Bed.

Pet. I'll keep thee waking, I warrant thee; Ho Curtis, bring us a Flaggon of March-Beer, and fome Tobacco, and clean Pipes, we'll be merry. [Exit. Curtis.

Marg. Why what d' ye mean, are you Mad?

Pet. Mad? Ay, what fhould we do? I mean thou and I hand to fift, will drink a Health to my Father, and my Sifter, and all our good Friends at London.

Enter Servant with Beer and Tobacco.

Marg. Why you don't take me to be one of your fellow Tofpots?

Pet. I mean to teach thee to Drink; thou muft learn that, or thou'rt no Wife for me: Here, Peg, to thee with all my Heart, a whole one, and thou art Welcome; My Father's good Health, Peg, you fhall Pledge it.

Marg. I can't drink without eating; 'twill make me Sick.

Pet. Pifh, Pifh, that's but a Fancy; Come, off with it, or thou fhalt neither eat nor drink this Month.

Marg.

Marg. Shall I go to Bed when I have drank it?

Saun. Gud at ye'd gi Sauny a little Drink Madam.

Pet. Talk of that anon. [She Drinks.] So, here Peg, here's a Pipe I have fill'd for thee my self, sit down, and light it.

Marg. D'ye mean to make a meer Hackney Horse of me? What do you offer me your nasty Tobacco for?

Pet. Nay, ne're make so shy, I know thou lov'st it: Come, young Ladies are often troubled with the Tooth-ach, and take it in their Chambers, though they won't appear Good Fellows amongst us: Take it, or no Sleep nor Meat, Peg, D'ye hear.

Marg. Yes, to my Grief; I won't be abus'd thus. [Weeps.]

Pet. Nay, nay, go where thou wilt, I'll make thee Smoak before I Sleep. [Exeunt.

ACT. IV.

Enter Petruchio and Sauny.

Pet. SIrrah, wait on your Mistress; Say what you will to her, and vex her, but do not touch her; and let her have no Meat I charge ye.

Saun. S'blead Sir, send her into the Highlands in Scotland, there's Hunger and Caud enough, there she may starve her Bally foo.

Pet. Well Sirrah, do as I direct you. [Exit.

Saun. O' my Saul wull I Sir, Ye'l let me take my Head-piece to defend me Sir.

Enter Margaret.

Marg. What Gregory, Philip! No Body near me? Sauny, where are you?

Saun. Is'e e'en hard at your Arse Madam.

Marg. Where's your Master?

Saun.

Saun. He's gone to the Market himſel, and he'll bring ye heam a Braw Bull's Puzzle to Swadle your Weam with.

Marg. And the mean time I am Famiſh'd; was ever Woman us'd ſo Damnably? I am Starv'd for Meat, Giddy for want of Sleep; and that which Spites me more then all the reſt, is, he pretends 'tis out of Care and Love to me: Prithee good Sauny give me ſome Meat.

Saun. O' my Saul, Sauny wou'd be Hang'd; gin I ſud beſtow and aw'd Liquor'd Boot, Sauny will cut it into Tripes to ſtuff your Weam with.

Marg. Good Sauny, here's Money for thee, but one little bit of any thing to ſtay my fainting Spirits?

Saun. What will you eat a Bit of Beef?

Marg. Ay, good Sauny.

Saun. Will ye eat ſome Muſtard to't?

Marg. Ay, good Sauny, quickly.

Saun. Muſtard is nea gu'd for your Tang, 'twill make it tea keen, and ye can Scau'd faſt enough without.

Marg. Why then the Beef without Muſtard.

Saun. Gud Beef is nee gued without Muſtard: Sauny will fetch ye ſome Meal and Water, ye'ſt make ye a Scotch Pudding, ye'ſt Eat of that tull your Weam crack.

Marg. You Abuſive Rogue take that, [Beat's him.] Muſt I be brav'd thus by my own Servant.

Saun. The Dee'l waſh your Face with a Fou Clout.

Enter Geraldo.

Geral. Why how now, Sirrah, will you ſtrike your Miſtreſs? You cowardly Rogue ſtrike a Woman.

Saun. S'blead Sir, D'ye Caw a Scotsman a Coward? Gin Is'e had ye in Scotland, Is'e put my Whinyard in your Weam, gin ye were as ſtout as Gilderoy.

Geral.

Geral. Why Gilderoy was as arrant a Coward as thou art.

Saun. Wuns yeed be lath to keep the Grund that Gilderoy quits; yet I muſt confeſs he was a little Shame-fac'd before the Enemy.

Marg. O Mr. Geraldo, never was Poor Woman ſo us'd. For Charity ſake Convey me home to my Father.

Enter Petruchio with a Diſh of Meat.

Petru. Here Peg, here's Meat for thee, I have dreſt it my ſelf, my Dear; Geraldo welcome, this was kindly done to viſit Peg and Me; Come Peg, fall to, here's an Excellent piece of Veal.

Marg. Why 'tis a Pullet.

Pet. Why 'tis Veal, art thou Mad?

Marg. You won't Perſwade me out of my Senſes, 'tis a Pullet.

Saun. Gud is it Sir.

Pet. What an unhappy Man am I, my poor Dear Peg's diſtracted. I always fear'd 'twould come to this. Take the Meat away Curtis; is the Room ready as I order'd? Are the Lights Damm'd up?

Curt. Yes Sir.

Marg. Why what d'ye mean to do with me?

Pet. Poor Peg, I Pity thee; but thou ſhalt want no Help for thy Cure, you muſt be kept from the Light, it troubles thy Brain.

Geral. Hee I ſhall learn, he's an excellent Teacher.

Marg. Why Sir, Pray tell me, have you a mind to make me Mad? This is the way indeed: How have I injur'd you, that you uſe me thus inhumanly? Did you Marry me to ſtarve me?

Saun. He means to bring down your Weam for a Race; For we aways Cry a Nag with a Weam, but a Mare with Nean.

Pet. No, no; Good Peg thou know'ſt I have a Care of thee; Here's a Gown juſt brought home for thee Peg. Now thou art empty, it will ſit Handſomly; ſomly; Where is the Taylor? Call him in Sauny, if it fits you, you ſhall put it on, and we'll Gallop o'er to London, and ſee your Father; your Siſter's Wedding is at hand, you muſt help her.

Enter Taylor with a Gown.

Marg. If ſhe be match'd as I am, Heaven help her! But there's ſome Comfort in going Home; there's Meat and Sleeping-room.

Pet. Come, Taylor, let's ſee the Gown; How now, what's here? Bleſs me, what Maſquing Suit is this! What's this a Sleeve? Why 'tis like a Demmy Cannon; Why what a Devil Taylor doſt thou mean? Is this a Gown?

Tay. A Gown, Sir! Yes, Sir, and a handſom Gown as any Man in London can make, 'tis the neweſt Faſhon lately come out of France.

Pet. What a lying Knave art thou! My great Grand-mother's Picture in the Matted Gallery is juſt ſuch another.

Saun. It is like the Picture of Queen Margaret in Edenbrough Caſtle, Sir.

Marg. I never ſaw a better Faſhion'd Gown in my Life, more quaint, nor better ſhap'd: I like the Gown, and I'll have this Gown, or I'll have none; ſay what you will I like it, 'tis a handſom Gown.

Pet. Why thou ſay'ſt true, Peg, 'tis an ugly paltry Gown, I am glad to hear thee of my Mind; 'tis a beaſtly Gown.

Marg. Why I ſay 'tis a good Gown, a handſom faſhionable Gown: What d'ye mean to make a Puppet of me?

Pet. Ay, this Fellow wou'd make a Puppet of thee.

Tay. She ſays your Worſhip means to make a Puppet of her.

Pet. Thou impudent lying Thread, Bodkin and Thimble, Flea; thou Nit, brave me in my own Houſe? Go take it, I'll ha' none on't.

Tay Sir,

Tay. Sir, I made it according to your Directions, and I cannot take it again.

Saun. Tak it awaw, or the Deel o' my Luggs, but yeſt tak my Whineyard.

Marg. He ſhall not take it agen; what need you trouble your ſelf about it, as long as it pleaſes me; lay it down there.

Pet. Sirrah, take it away, I ſay, we ſhall find more Taylors; I won't have my Wife ſo Antickly dreſs'd, that the Boys ſhould hoot at her.

Marg. Come, come, all this is but fooling; you don't underſtand what belongs to a Gown; ſay what you will I'm reſolv'd to have it, if it were an ugly one I wou'd wear it, if it were but to croſs you.

Saun. Now the Deel's a cruppen intul her Mouth, Sir, you may ſee a little of his Tail hang out, it looks for aw the World as it were a Sting, Sir.

Pet. Why that's my good Peg, I know thou doſt not care for it; ſay no more prithee, thou ſhalt have another.

Marg. I know not what you mean to do with me; but methinks I might have leave to ſpeak, and ſpeak I will, I am no Child, no Baby; your Betters have endur'd me to ſpeak my Mind, and if you cannot you had beſt ſtop your Ears; 'tis better ſet my Tongue at Liberty, than let my Heart break.

Pet. Speak Peg, by all means, ſay what thou wilt; Sirrah, carry that tawdry thing away; Geraldo tell him you'll ſee him paid, [Aſide.] and bid him leave it. Come, what ſay'ſt thou Peg?

Ger. Leave the Gown in the next Room, Taylor, and take no notice of what he ſays, I'll ſee you paid for't. [Aſide. Exit.

Marg. Why, I ſay I will have that Gown, and every thing I have a mind for; I did not bring you ſuch a Portion to be made a Fool of.

Pet. Very true, thou'rt in the right, Peg: Come let's to Horſe, theſe Cloaths will ſerve turn at preſent, 'till we can get better. Go, Sirrah, lead the Horſes

Horſes to the Land's End, thither we'll walk a Foot; let's ſee, I think 'tis about ſeven a-Clock, we ſhall reach to my Father-in-law's by Dinner-time with Eaſe.

Marg. 'Tis almoſt Two, you cannot get thither by Supper-time.

Pet. It ſhall be Seven e're I go; why, what a Miſchief's this? What I ſay or do, you are ſtill croſſing it. Let the Horſes alone, I will not go to Day, and e're I do, it ſhall be what a Clock I pleaſe.

Marg. Nay, Sir, that ſhan't ſtop our Journey; 'tis Seven, or Two, or Nine, or what a-Clock you pleaſe; pray let's go.

Saun. Yeſt have it what Hour you wull, Sir.

Pet. Very well, it is ſo; get ready quickly; Come Geraldo, let's all go, we ſhall help mend the Mirth at my Siſter's Wedding.

Ger. I'll wait on you.

Pet. Come Peg, get on your Things.

Marg. Let me but once ſee Lincolns-Inn-Fields again, and then thou ſhalt not tame me. [Exit.

Enter Tranio and Snatchpenny.

Tran. Now, Sirrah, be but impudent enough, and keep State like the old Knight, and thou art made for ever.

Snatch. I warrant ye, Sir, I know it to a Hair; my Lord Beaufoy and I were School-fellows together at Worceſter; my Eſtate lies in the Vale of Eveſham, three Thouſand Pounds a Year, and fifteen Hundred a Year, I ſettle upon you upon the Marriage; let me alone, I am Sir Lyonel himſelf.

Tran. Right, right; excellent, brave; how now.

Enter Jemmy.

Jem. To your Poſtures old Sinner, be an exquiſite Raſcal, and then thou ſhalt be a Rogue Paramount; thou ſhalt lay the Dragon aſleep while my Maſter ſteals the Pippins.

Tran. Well,

Tran. Well, Jemmy, What haſt thou done?

Jem. I have been with my Lord Beaufoy, preſented your Father's, and your Service to him, and told him the old Knight was happily come to Town, and hearing of your Love to Bianchn, was ſo overjoy'd, he would ſettle all upon you.

Tran. Well, and what ſaid he?

Jem. He gave me a Piece for my News; I told him Sir Lyonell deſired his Company juſt now to treat upon the Match; he's coming in all haſte, he longs to be couzen'd, and Snatchpenny if thou doſt not do it ——

Snatch. Then hang me.

Jem. Mum, look to't, he's here.

Enter Beaufoy and Winlove.

Beau. Mr. Winlove, your Man tells me your Father is juſt happily come to Town; Where is he?

Tran. Here, Sir, this is my Father; Time has been too bold to wear ye out of each others Memory.

Snatch. Is this my Lord Beaufoy, Sir?

Tran. Yes, Sir.

Snatch. My Lord, your humble Servant; I'm happy at laſt to meet a Perſon I have formerly ſo much lov'd.

Beau. Noble Sir Lyonell, I joy to ſee you.

Snatch. O the merry Days that you and I have ſeen, my Lord; well fare the good old Times, I ſay.

Beau. Ay, Sir Lyonell, when you and I were acquainted firſt.

Snatch. Ay marry, they were Golden Days, indeed, no Couzening, no Cheating, the World is alter'd.

Beau. But we will remember theſe Times, and be honeſt ſtill.

Snatch. That's e'en the beſt way, there's hopes we may have honeſt Grand-Children too, if all be true as

as I hear, my Son tells me, your Daughter has made a Captive of him.

Beau. I wou'd ſhe were better for his ſake; ſhe's a good Girl, and a handſom one, though I ſay it; if ſhe were not, I wou'd give her ſomewhat ſhou'd make her ſo.

Tran. It takes rarely.

Snatch. I'm even overjoy'd that you think my Son worthy your Alliance, I'll give ſomthing they ſhall make a Shift to live on; in Pain and in Brief, if you'll approve of it, I'll ſettle fifteen hundred Pound a Year upon him at preſent, which ſhall be her Joynture; after my Death, all I have with a good Will; What ſay you, my Lord.

Beau. Sir Lyonell, Your Freedom pleaſes me; I ſee you are an honeſt meaning Gentleman: The young Folks (if I am not miſtaken) like one another. Well, I ſay no more, it is a Match.

Tran. You bind me to you ever: Now I may boldly ſay, I am truly happy: Where will you pleaſe to have the Buſineſs made up?

Beau. Not in my Houſe, Son; I wou'd have it private; Pitchers have Ears, and I have many Servants; beſides, Old Woodall will be hindring of us; he's hearkening ſtill, and will be interrupting.

Tran. Then at my Lodging, there my Father lies, and there the Buſineſs may be all diſpatch'd: Send for your Daughter by this Gentleman; my Boy ſhall fetch a Scrivener preſently. The worſt on't is, 'tis too ſmall a Warning. You are like to have but ſlender Entertainment.

Beau. No matter, no matter; I ſhall like it.

Snatch. I wou'd feign ſee your Daughter, my Lord; I have heard great Commendations of her.

Beau. That you ſhall preſently; Monſieur, pray go to Biancha, and tell her from me, ſhe muſt come hither with you immediately; you may tell her too, if you will, what has hap'ned, and that ſhe muſt prepare to be Mr. Winlove's Bride.

Win. My

Win. My Lord, me vil fetch her preſant.

Tran. My Lord, Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to walk in with my Father; this is my Lodging.

Beau. Ay, Sir; Come, Sir Lyonell, I'll follow you.

Snatch. Good my Lord, I will wait upon you.

[Exit. Beaufoy, Snat. Tra.

Win. Thus far 'tis well carry'd on Jemmy; But how ſhall we proſecute it?

Jem. Why, there is but one way in the World, Sir.

Win. And what's that?

Jem. Why thus, I have got a Parſon ready for the Purpoſe; when you have got Biancha abroad, whip her into Covent-Garden Church, and there Marry her, and your Work's done.

Win. Troth, thou ſay'ſt true; But is the Parſon Orthodox and Canonical? I wou'd not have an Obadiah to make us enter into Covenant of Matrimony.

Jem. Truſt me, Sir, he's as true as Steel; he ſays all Matrimony without Book; he can Chriſten, Wed, and Bury blindfold.

Win. Well, I'll take thy Counſel, if I can perſwade her to't, as I hope I ſhall, for I know ſhe loves me; fair Luck betide me: But who comes here?

Enter Woodall.

Jem. 'Tis the Old Grub Woodall; What ſhall we do with him?

Win. We muſt contrive ſome way to get him off.

Wood. I don't like thoſe ſhuffling Matters; I doubt there's ſome falſe Play towards me in Hand: Here's my Monſieur, he may inform me——Monſieur.

Win. Que dites vous, Monſieur, Monſieur, your Servant.

Wood. Monſieur, Prithee tell me, if thou can'ſt, how Affairs go, things are carried very cloſely; How ſtands my Miſtreſs affected?

Win. Ma

Win. Ma foy, Monſieur; Me tell you de bad News in the Varld, Mademoiſelle Biancha no ſtand affected to you at all. My Lord has ſent me to fetch her juſt now to be Marry to Monſieur, Vat you call? Monſieur Le ———

Wood. What, not to Winlove?

Win. Yes, to Monſieur Winlove; Begar me be very ſorry, but me canno help dat.

Wood. Is Old Beaufoy mad to Match her to him without his Father's Privity.

Win. Here be de ver fine Old Man, new come to Town, me Lord be wid him now.

Wood. Upon my Life, Old Sir Lyonell, nay, then ſhe's loſt quite; Hark you, Monſieur, yet 'tis in your Power to make me a happy Man.

Win. O Monſieur, me be your humble Servant.

Wood. Why, look you, you are to fetch her; here's forty Pound in Gold to buy you a Pair of Gloves, let me take her from you, as you are carrying her thither: I will have two or three with me, and you may ſafely ſay ſhe was forc'd from you.

Win. Monſieur, begar me do you all de Service in the Varld, but me ſal be de grand, Sheat, Knave then.

Wood. That's nothing, here's more Money, I'll ſave you harmleſs; come, you ſhall do it.

Win. Monſieur, me have no mind to be von Knave, but to do you Service, if you will meet me upon de Street.

Wood. Fear not, I'll ſecure you, honeſt Monſieur farewel; I will be your Friend for ever. [Exit.

Win. Ha, ha, ha, this is rare: What an Aſs this Fellow will make himſelf, do what we can? Here, Jemmy, thou ſhalt ſhare with me.

Jem. Thank you, Sir; wou'd we had ſuch a Windfall every Day: But come, Sir, you muſt make haſte, this is the Critical Minute; if you miſs it, you loſe Biancha.

Win. Thy

Win. Thy Counſel's good, away; I'll buy a Ring, and pay the Prieſt with ſome of Woodall's Money; Ha, ha, ha. [Exeunt.

Enter Petruchio, Margaret, Geraldo and Sauny.

Pet. Walk your Horſes down the Hill before, we ſhall reach London time enough, 'tis a fair Night: How bright and goodly the Moon ſhines?

Marg. The Moon! the Sun; 'tis not the Moon-light now.

Pet. I ſay, 'tis the Moon that ſhines ſo bright.

Marg. I ſay, 'tis the Sun that ſhines ſo bright.

Pet. Now by my Mother's Son, and that's my ſelf, it ſhall be the Moon-light, or what I pleaſe, before you ſet Sight of your Father's Houſe; Sirrah, go fetch the Horſes back; evermore Croſs'd, and Croſs'd, and nothing but Croſs'd.

Ger. Say as he ſays, or we ſhall never go.

Marg. Forward, I pray Sir, ſince we are come ſo far; and be it Sun or Moon, or what you pleaſe: Nay, if you call it a Ruſh-Candle, henceforth it ſhall be ſo for me.

Pet. I ſay 'tis the Moon.

Saun. S'blead, but I ſay nay, Sir; Out, out, 'a Lies.

Marg. I know 'tis the Moon.

Pet. Nay, then you Lye, 'tis the Bleſſed Sun.

Marg. Why, Heaven be bleſs'd for it, 'tis even what you have a Mind to; pray let us forward.

Gera. Petruchio, go thy ways, the Field is won.

Pet. Well, forward, forward; now the Bowl runs with a right Byaſs, but ſoft, here's Company.

Enter

Enter Sir Lyonel Winlove.

Sir Lyo. Boy, bid the Coachman drive gently down the Hill; I wonder I meet, nor overtake no Paſſengers to Day; ſtay, I think here are ſome.

Pet. I will have one Bout more with thee, Peg; Good-morrow gentle Lady; Which way Travel you? Come hither, Peg; Did'ſt thou ever behold ſo exquiſite a Beauty as this fair Virgin bears about? Go to her, Peg, and Salute her.

Marg. Are you Mad, 'tis an Old Man.

Pet. Beat back agen then, ſtill croſs? Will you do it?

Saun. Why i'th' Deel's Name, what mean ye? It's nea bonny Laſs, Sir; S'blead, it's an aw faw Theefe.

Gera. He'll make this Old Man mad.

Marg. You budding Virgin, ſo fair, ſo ſweet, ſo freſh, which way travel you? How happy ſhou'd we be in the Enjoyment of ſo fair a Fellow-Traveller.

Saun. The Dee'l has built a Bird's-Neſt in your Head; Gud, ye'r as mad as he; and he as mad as gin he were the Son of a March Hare, Sir.

Sir Lyon. Why, what do ye mean, Gentlewoman?

Pet. Why, how now, Peg, I hope thou art not mad: A Virgin Quotha! 'tis an old wrinckl'd wither'd Man.

Marg. Reverend Sir, pardon my miſtaking Eyes, that have been ſo dazled with the Moon (Sun I mean.) I cou'd not diſtinguiſh you; I now perceive you are a grave old Man, pray excuſe me.

Sir Lyon. Indeed you are a merry Lady; your encounter has amaz'd me. But I like ſuch chearful Company; I am for London to ſee a Son of mine, that went lately from me thither.

Pet. We ſhall be glad of your Company; you muſt pardon my Wife's Error, ſhe has not ſlept well to night; and I cou'd not perſwade her, but ſhe wou'd come out Faſting, which makes her Fancy a little extravagant.

Saun. The Dee'l o' my Sol but you are a falſe Trundle Tail Tike, the Deel a bit hee'd lat her eat theſe three Days, Sir.

Marg. Curſe upon your Excuſe, and the Cauſe of it; I cou'd have eaten my Shoe-ſoles, if I might have had 'em fry'd.

Pet. Your Name, I beſeech you, Sir.

Sir Lyon. I am call'd Sir Lyonel Winlove in the Country.

Pet. Father to young Mr. Winlove?

Sir Lyon. The ſame Sir.

Pet. Then I am happy indeed to have met you; I can tell you ſome News, perhaps may not be unwelcome to you. Your Son is in a fair Probability of calling me Brother within theſe two Days.

Sir Lyon. How ſo, I pray Sir?

Pet. Why he's upon Marrying my Wife's Siſter, my Lord Beaufoy's youngeſt Daughter. A brave Match, I can aſſure you, and a ſweet Bedfellow.

Saun. Gud ſhe's tea geud for any Mon but Sauny; Gud Gin poor Sauny had her in Scotland, Wun's I'de ſea Swing her about.

Sir Lyon. You amaze me! Is this true? Or have you a Mind, like a pleaſant Traveller, to break a Jeſt on the Company you overtake?

Gera. Upon my Word, Sir, 'tis very true; 'twas ſo deſign'd; but I don't think he'll marry her, he's Forſworn if he do.

Sir

Sir Lyon. You make me wonder more and more.

Pet. Mind him not, he's a Party concern'd, 'tis true.

Sir Lyon. Pray, Gentlemen, let's make haſte; I muſt look after this Buſineſs, it ſounds ſtrangely, he wou'd not do't without my Conſent; he's my only Son, my Heir, the Prop of my Family, I muſt be careful.

Pet. I ſee you are Jealous, Sir; but you need not; he cannot have a better Match.

Sir Lyon. I doubt it not, if all be fair; I ſhould be glad of my Lord Beaufoy's Alliance, he was my School-fellow; but Time, I doubt, has worn out our old Acquaintance: Gentlemen, I muſt haſten to prevent the worſt.

Saun. What mean ye, Sir? Yea will nea bawk the Bonny Lad, and tak fro his Mantle, Sir.

Gera. Well, Petruchio, thou haſt put me in a Heat, have at my Widow now. [Exeunt.

Enter Winlove, Biancha, Jemmy.

Win. How good you are my Fair one: Jemmy, Art ſure the Prieſt is ready for us?

Jem. I warrant you, Sir; pray make haſte, ſome Devil or other may come elſe and croſs it. Don't ſtay Thrumming of Caps; here, Body o' me away, here's Woodall, ſhift for your ſelves, all will be ſpoil'd elſe. [Exit. Win. and Bian.

Enter Woodall with three or four Fellows.

Wood. Be ſure you ſeize on her, and clap her into a Chair, and one ſtop her Mouth; fear not, I'll ſave you harmleſs.

1ſt. Fellow. I warrant you, Sir.

Wood. What a Devil makes this Rogue Poaching here?

Jem. Tum, te Dum, te Dum Sing Old Coal of London. [Sings.

Wood. Now, Jemmy, What walk you here for?

Jem. Why to look about me; Te Dum, te Dum, &c.

Wood. They ſay your Maſter is to be marry'd to Madam Biancha to Day.

Jem. Why then we'll be merry at Night; Te Dum, te Dum, &c.

Wood. The Rogue won't be gone: What, haſt no Buſineſs? Thou look'ſt as if thou hadſt not drank to Day, there's ſomething for thee; go get thy Morning's Draught.

Jem. I thank your Worſhip: Will you take Part of a Pot of Ale and a Toaſt.

Wood. No, Sirrah, I drank Coffee this Morning. [Exit Jemmy.

So, he's gone; I wonder Monſieur appears not with Biancha.

Enter Petruchio, Margaret, Sir Lyonel, Geraldo, and Sauny, with Attendants.

Wood. Ha, Who comes there?

Geral. Now you are there I'll take my Leave; your Servant. [Exit.

Pet. Sir Lyonel, you are welcome to Town; there's your Son's Lodgings; my Father lives on the other Side; thither we muſt go, and therefore here I take my Leave.

Sir Lyon. Pray ſtay a little, may be he's not within; if ſo, I'll wait upon you to the Lord Beaufoy.

Saun. O' my Sol, nea ean cou'd have beg'd [Knocks] Dunner better than this awd Thief has done.

Wood. They

Wood. They are all buſie within, Sir; you muſt Knock louder if you mean to be heard.

[Snatchpenny above.

Snatch. Who is that Knocks, as if he wou'd beat down the Gate.

Sir Lyon. Is Mr. Winlove within?

Snatch. He is within, but not to be ſpoken with.

Sir Lyon. What if a Man bring him a hundred Pounds or two, to make merry withal.

Snatch. Keep your hundred Pounds for your ſelf, he ſhall need none as long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you, Sir, your Son was well belov'd in London. D'ye hear, Sir, leaving your frivolous Circumſtances, pray tell him, his Father's juſt now come out of the Country to ſee him, and is here at the Door to ſpeak with him.

Snatch. That is a Lye, Sir; his Father came to Town Yeſterday, and is now here looking out at Window.

Sir Lyon. The Devil he is; Are you his Father?

Snatch. Yes, Sir; ſo his Mother ſays, if I may believe her.

Saun. Can they hang him for having twa Fathers, Sir? Gud and 'twas ſea, poor Sauny wou'd be hang'd ſure enough.

Pet. Why, haſt thou two Fathers?

Saun. Gud have I, and Twa, and Twa to that, Sir.

Pet. Why, how now Gentlemen, this is flat Knavery, to take another Man's Name upon you.

Snatch. Lay Hands upon this Villain, I believe he means to cheat ſome Body here, under my Counter-Name.

Enter Jemmy.

Jem. I have ſeen the Church on their Back, ſend them good Speeding: Ha, how now, my old Maſter, Sir Lyonel? S'foot, we are all loſt, undone; I muſt brazen it out.

Sir Lyon. Come hither, Crack-Hemp.

Jem. You may ſave me that Labour, and come to me, if you have any thing to ſay to me.

Sir Lyon. Come hither, you Rogue; What have you forgot me?

Jem. Forgot you, Sir? I cou'd not forget you; for I never ſaw you in all my Life before.

Sir Lyon. You notorious Villain, Didſt thou never ſee thy Maſter's Father, Sir Lyonell Winlove?

Jem. What my Worſhipful old Maſter? Yes, marry, Sir: See where his Worſhip looks out of the Window.

Sir Lyon. Does he ſo, Sir? I'll make you find him below Stairs. [Beats him.

Jem. Help, help, here's a Mad-man will Murder me.

Saun. Dea Caw your ſel Jemmy? And wull ye be beten by an aw ſaw Theſe? An yea caw your ſel Jemmy eance meare, I'ſe bang ye tea Clootes, breed a Gud will I, Sir.

Snatch. Help Son, help Brother Beaufoy, Jemmy will be kill'd.

Pet. Prithee Peg ſtand by to ſee this Controverſy.

Enter Snatchpenny with Servants, Beaufoy and Tranio.

Tran. S'heart 'tis Sir Lyonell; but we muſt bear it a little Time: Sir, What are you that offer to beat my Servants?

Sir

Sir Lyon. What am I, Sir; Nay, What are you, Sir? O Heaven what do I ſee! O fine Villains, I'm undone, while I play the Good Husband at home in the Country, my Son, and my Servants ſpend my Eſtate Laviſhly at London.

Saun. Your Son ſal allow you Siller to keep an Awd Wutch to rub your Shins; And what to anger wou'd ye ha meer Sir.

Tran. How now, What's the Matter?

Beau. Is the Man Frantick?

Tran. Sir You ſeem a ſober ancient Gentleman by your Habit; but your Words ſhew you a Madman: Why Sir, What concerns it you what rich Cloaths I wear? I thank my good Father, I am able to maintain it.

Sir Lyon. Thy Father! O Villain! he's a Hempdreſſer in Partha.

Saun. Mary the Deel ſtuff his Wem ſow a Hemp, and his Dam Spin it out at his Arſe.

Beau. You miſtake, you miſtake; What d'ye think his Name is?

Sir Lyon. His Name; as if I knew not his Name; I have bred him up e're ſince he was Three Years old, and his Name is Tranio.

Snatch. Away, away, mad Aſs, his Name is Winlove, my only Son, and Heir to all my Eſtate in the Vale of Eveſham.

Sir Lyon. Heavens! he has murther'd his Maſter; lay hold on him. I charge you in the King's Name, O my Son, tell me thou Villain, Where is my Son Winlove?

Tran. Run for an Officer to carry this mad Knave to the Jayl; Lay hold on him I charge ye, and ſee him forth-coming.

Saun. Awa, awa with the Hampdreſſer Sir.

Sir Lyon. Carry me to the Jayl ye Villains!

Pet. Hold Gentlemen; Your Bleſſing Father.

Beau. Son Petruchio Welcome. You have it, and you Peg, how d'ye? Know ye any thing of this matter?

Pet. My Lord, take heed what you do; ſo much I know, I dare Swear this is Sir Lyonel Winlove, and that a Counterfeit.

Saun. Wuns, I think ſea tea, gud an ye pleaſe I'ſe take the Covenant on't.

Wood. So durſt I Swear too almoſt.

Snatch. Swear if thou durſt.

Wood. Sir I dare not Swear Point Blank

Tran. You had beſt Swear, I am not Winlove neither.

Wood. Yes, I know you to be Mr. Winlove.

Beau. Away with the Dotard, away with him to my Lodgings for the preſent, 'till we can get a Conſtable to charge him with, we have a hubbub in the Streets, drag him I ſay.

Sir. Lyon. Rogues, Villains, Murderers! I ſhall have Juſtice. [Exit with Sir Lyonel.

Wood Theſe are ſtrange Paſſages, I know not what to think of 'em; but I am glad Biancha came not when they were here, ſure my Monſieur will not fail me.

Enter Winlove and Biancha.

Win. Now my Biancha I am truly Happy, our Loves ſhall like the Spring be ever growing.

Bian. But how ſhall we Eſcape my Fathers Anger.

Win. Fear not, I'll warrant thee.

Wood. O here's Biancha, how now Monſieur brave, What fancy's this?

Win. O Monſieur te Vous la Mains, How d'ye do, good Mr. Woodall, how d'ye like my new Bride?

Wood. How, how, how, Sir, your Bride? Sieze on her quickly.

Win. Hands off, ſhe's my Wife, touch her who dares; Will you have your Teeth pickt? What d'ye think of giving 20 Pieces to teach your Miſtreſs French.

Wood. O Rogue, I'll have thee hang'd.

Win. Or 40 Pieces to buy a Pair of Gloves, to let you Steal Madam Biancha: This Ring was bought with ſome of it, ha, ha, ha.

Wood. Down with him, down with him, a damn'd Raſcal.

Win. I, do, Which of you has a mind to breath a Vein?

2 Fell. Nay if ſhe be his Wife we dare not touch her.

Wood. I'll fetch ſome body that ſhall, O Devil. [Exit.

Win. Ay do, I am your poor Monſieur, ha, ha, ha; Fear not Biancha, he'll fetch 'em all I know, I warrant thee we ſhall appeaſe thy Father eaſily.

Bian. Truſt me Sir, I fear the Storm.

Enter Beaufoy, Tranio, Petruchio, Margaret. Sauny, Snatchpenny, Jemmy, Sir Lyonel, Woodal, and Attendants.

Wood. That Rogue, that Damn'd Counterfit Frenchman has ſtoln your Daughter and married her, here they are.

Win. Bleſs me, What do I ſee yonder my Father, in earneſt? Dear Sir your Bleſſing, and your Pardon.

Sir Lyon. My Dear Son, Art thou alive? then take it.

Bian. I muſt beg your Pardon too Sir.

Win. And I moſt Honoured Father.

Beau. Why what's the Matter? What hast thou done? Woodall tells me thou hast Married the Frenchman.

Win. Me she has Married, but no Frenchman. The right Winlove, Son to the right Winlove is her Husband, and your Son in-Law.

Saun. S'blead Sir, ye act twa parts, ye were but a Hamp-dresser in the last Act, Sir.

Snatch. 'Tis time for us to be going, I feel one Ear going off already. [Exit.

Beau. You amaze me, are not you the Frenchman, Mr. Woodall prefer'd to teach my Daughter?

Bian. No my Lord, he put on that Disguise to Court me, he is the true Winlove.

Sir Lyon. Marry is he my Son, Sir.

Win. Those were but Counterfeits of my making.

Wood. Here's Patching with a Mistress, I'm sure I am Gull'd.

Beau. But d'ye hear Sir? Have you Married my Daughter without my Consent.

Sir Lyon. Come my Lord, now you must know me; I will beg both their Pardons, and Secure her a Jointure worthy her Birth and Fortune.

Win. You are a Father now Indeed.

Beau. Sir Lyonel excuse my rashness, I accept your noble Proffer, you are forgiven.

Saun. S'blead Sir, we sal nere go to Dunner Sir, the Deel forgat and forgive you aw, Sir.

Sir Lyon. But where is that Rogue that would have sent me to Jayl? I'll slit his Nose for him.

Win. I must beg his Pardon, for he did all for my Sake.

Sir Lyon. Well Sir, for your Sake I Pardon him.

Beau. Come Gentlemen all to my House, we shall there end our Doubts, and drown our Fears.

Wood.

Wood. Sir, I ſhall expect my Money back again; 'tis enough to looſe my Miſtreſs.

Win. No faith 'tis in better hands already, you'l but fool it away, you'll be hiring Frenchmen agen.

Wood. Well mock on, I'll in and eat out part of it.

Beau. Come Gentlemen.

Marg. Husband will you not go with my Father?

Pet. Firſt kiſs me Peg, and I will.

Marg. What in the middle of the Street.

Pet. What art thou aſham'd of me?

Marg. Not ſo Sir, but aſham'd to kiſs ſo openly.

Pet. Why then let's home again, Sauny lead the way.

Saun. Gud the Deel a bit will Sauny Budge before Dunner, Sir.

Marg. Nay I will give thee a Kiſs, nay pray now ſtay.

Pet. So is not this well? come my ſweet Peg.

Beau. Siſter I hope we ſhall be Friends now.

Marg. I was never Foes with you.

Win. Come faireſt, all the Storms are overblown;
Love hath both Wit and Fortune of her own.

[Exeunt.

ACT. V.

ACT. V.

Enter Margaret and Biancha.

Bian. BUT is't Poſſible Siſter, he ſhou'd have us'd you thus?

Marg. Had I ſerv'd him as bad as Eve did Adam, he cou'd not have us'd me worſe; but I am reſolv'd now I'm got home again I'll be reveng'd, I'll muſter up the Spight of all the Curs'd Women ſince Noah's Flood to do him Miſchief, and add new Vigour to my Tongue; I have not par'd my Nails this fortnight, they are long enough to do him ſome Execution, that's my Comfort.

Bian. Bleſs me Siſter, how you talk.

Marg. Thou art a Fool Biancha, come learn of me; thou art married to a Man too, thou doſt not know but thou mayſt need my Counſel, and make good uſe on't; Thy Husband bears thee fair yet, but take heed of going home with him, for when once he has thee within his Verge, 'tis odds he'll have his freaks too; there's no truſting theſe Men: Thy Temper is ſoft and eaſy, thou muſt learn to break him, or he'll break thy Heart.

Bian. I muſt confeſs I ſhou'd be loath to be ſo us'd, but ſure Mr. Winlove is of a better Diſpoſition.

Marg. Truſt him and hang him, they're all alike; Come thou ſhalt be my Schollar, learn to Frown, and cry out for unkindneſs, but brave Anger, thou haſt a Tongue, make uſe on't; Scold, Fight, Scratch, Bite, any thing, ſtill take Exceptions at all he does, if there be Cauſe or not, if there be Reaſon for't he'll laugh at thee.

I'll.

I'll make Petruchio glad to wipe my Shoes, or walk my Horſe, ere I have done with him.

Enter Petruchio, Winlove, Sauny.

Blan. Peace Siſter, our Husbands are both here.

Marg. Thou Child I am glad on't, I'll ſpeak louder.

Pet. Well Brother Winlove now we are truly happy, never were Men ſo Bleſt with two ſuch Wives.

Win. I am glad to hear you ſay ſo Sir, my own I'm ſure I'm Bleſt in.

Pet. Yours, why Biancha's a Lyon, and Margaret a meer Lamb to her: I tell thee Winlove, there's no Man living tho' I ſay't, (but 'tis no matter ſince ſhe does not hear me) that has a Wife ſo Gentle, and ſo Active and Affable, poor thing I durſt be ſworn ſhe wou'd walk barefoot a hundred Miles to do me good.

Marg. No but ſhe wou'd not, nor one Mile neither.

Saun. Now have at your Luggs, Sir.

Pet. O Peg, art thou there? How doſt thou do my Dear?

Marg. You may go look, What's that to you?

Saun. Stand o' yer guard Sir, Gud Sauny will put on his head Peice.

Pet. I am glad to hear thee ſay thou'rt well in troth.

Marg. Never the better for you, which you ſhall find.

Pet. Nay I know thou lov'ſt me, Prithee take up my Glove Peg.

Marg. I take up your Glove; Marry come up, command your Servants, look you there it lyes.

Pet. I

Pet. I am glad to ſee thee merry, poor wanton Rogue.

Marg. 'Tis very well, you think you are in the Country but you are miſtaken, the caſe is alter'd, I am at home now, and my own diſpoſer; Go ſwagger at your greazy Lubber there, your Patient Wife will make you no more Sport, ſhe has a Father will allow her Meat and Lodging, and another gets Chamber-Maid then a Highlander.

Saun. Gud an ye were a top of Grantham Steple, that aw the Toon may hear what a Scauden Quean ye are, out, out.

Pet. Why what's the matter Peg? I never ſaw thee in ſo jolly a Humour, ſure thou haſt been Drinking.

Saun. Gud has ſhe, haud yer Tang, ye ſaw drunken Swine, out, out, out, was ye tak a Drink and nere tak Sauny to yee, out, out, out.

Marg. 'Tis like I have, I am the fitter to talk to you, for no ſober Woman is a Companion for you.

Pet. Troth thou ſayſt right, we are excellently Matcht.

Marg. Well mark the end on't, Petruchio prithee come hither, I have ſomething to ſay to you.

Saun. De ye nea budge a foot Sir, Deel a my ſol but ſhe'll Scratch your Eyn out.

Pet. Well, your Pleaſure Madam.

Marg. Firſt thou art a Pitiful Fellow, a thing beneath me, which I ſcorn and laugh at, ha, ha, ha.

Win. She holds her own yet I ſee.

Marg. I know not what to call thee, thou art no Man, thou couldſt not have a Woman to thy Mother; thou paltry, ſcurvy, ill condition'd Fellow, Fellow, doſt thou not Tremble to think how thou haſt us'd me; What are you ſilent Sir? Biancha ſee, Looks he not like a disbanded Officer, with that hang-dog look there? I muſt eat nothing becauſe your Cook has roaſted the Mutton dry, as you us'd to have it when your Worſhip was a Batchellor, I muſt not go to Bed neither, becauſe the Sheets are Damp.

Pet. Hark you Peg; What a ſtrange Woman are you to Diſcover openly the Fault of your Servants in your own Family.

Marg. No, no, Sir, this wont ſerve your turn; your Old Stock of Impudence won't carry you off ſo: I'll ſpeak your Fame, and tell what a fine Gentleman you are; how Valiantly you, and half a Dozen of your Men, got the better of a Single Woman, and made her loſe her Supper.

Saun. Gud ſhe Lyes Sir; I wu'd a gin her an awd Boot tull a made Tripes on, and it wud a bin bra Meat with Muſtard, and ſhe wou'd nea have it.

Marg. My Faults? No, good Squire of the Country, you thought to have Tam'd me, I warrant, in good time; why you ſee I am even with you; Your Quiet Patient Wife, that will go no more in the Country with you, but will ſtay in Town, to Laugh at your wiſe Worſhip, and wiſh you more Wit.

Pet. I ſhou'd laugh at that; why we are juſt now a going; Sauny go get the Horſes ready quickly.

Saun. Gud will I Sir; I'se Saddle a Highland-Wutch to carry your Bride; Gud ſhe'll mount your Arſe for you Madam.

Marg. Sirrah, touch a Horſe, and I'll Curry your Coxcomb for you: No Sir, I won't ſay Pray let me not go; but boldly, I won't go; do you force me me if you can or dare: You ſee I am not Tongue-ty'd, as ſilent as you thought you made me.

Pet. Prithee Peg, Peace a little, I know thou canſt ſpeak, leave now, or thou'lt have nothing to ſay to morrow.

Marg. Yes, I'll ſay this over again, and ſomething more if I can think on't, to a poor deſpiſed Man of Clouts: Siſter, how he ſmoaks now he's off his own Dunghil.

Pet. Prithee Peg leave making a Noiſe; I'faith thou'lt make my Head Ach.

Marg. Noiſe? Why this is Silence to what I intend; I'll talk louder than this, every Night in my Sleep.

Saun. The Dee'l ſhall be your Bed-fellow for Sauny then.

Marg. I will learn to Rail at thee in all Languages; Thunder ſhall be ſoft-muſick to my Tongue.

Saun. The Dee'l a bit Scot's ye gat to brangle in, marry the Dee'l gi ye a Clap wi a French Thunder-bolt.

Pet. Very pretty; Prithee go on.

Marg. I'll have a Collection of all the Ill Names that ever was invented, and call you over by 'em twice a-day.

Pet. And have a Catalogue publiſh'd for the Education of young Scolds, Proceed Peg.

Marg. I'll have you Chain'd to a Stake at Billinſgate, and baited by the Fiſh-wives, while I ſtand to hiſs 'em on.

Pet. Ha, ha, ha; Witty Peg, forward.

Marg. You ſhan't dare to blow your Noſe, but when I bid you; you ſhall know me to be the Maſter.

Saun. Wuns gar her to the Scool of Repantance, Sir.

Pet. Nay,

Pet. Nay, I believe, thou wilt go in Breeches ſhortly; On, on; What have you no more on't? Ha, ha, ha.

Marg. D'ye laugh and be hang'd? I'll ſpoil your Sport. [Flys at him.

Pet. Nay, Peg, Hands off; I thought you wou'd not have diſgrac'd your Good Parts, to come to Blows ſo ſoon; Prithee Chide on, thou can'ſt not believe what Delight I take to hear thee; It does become thee ſo well: What pumpt dry already? Prithee talk more and longer, and faſter, and ſharper this is nothing.

Marg. I'll ſee you in the Indies before I'll do any thing to pleaſe you; D'ye like it?

Pet. Extreamly! On Peg, you'll cool too faſt.

Marg. Why then Mark me, if it were to ſave thee from Drowning, or breaking thy Neck, I won't ſpeak one word more to thee theſe Two Months. [Sits Sullenly.

Saun. Ah Gud an ye do nea Lye, Madam.

Pet. Nay, Good Peg, be not ſo hard-hearted. What Melancholly all o'th' ſudden? Come, get up, we'll ſend for the Fidlers, and have a Dance; Thou'lt break thy Elbow with leaning on that hard Table: Saury, go get your Miſtreſs a Cuſhion; Alas! I doubt ſhe's not well; Look to her Siſter.

Bian. Are you not well, Siſter? What ail you? Pray ſpeak Siſter indeed, Brother, you have ſo vext her, ſhe'll be Sick.

Pet. Alas, alas! I know what's the matter with her, ſhe has the Tooth-ach. See how ſhe holds her Cheek; the Wind has gotten into her Teeth, by keeping her Mouth open this Cold Weather.

Bian. Indeed it may be ſo Brother, ſhe uſes to be troubled with that Pain ſometimes.

Pet. With-

Pet. Without all Queſtion; Poor Peg, I pitty thee; Which Tooth is it? Wilt thou have it Drawn, Peg? The Tooth-Ach makes Fools of all the Phyſicians; there is no Cure, but Drawing: What ſay'ſt thou? Wilt thou have it pull'd out? Well, thou ſhalt. Sauny, Run, Sirrah, hard by, you know where my Barber lives that drew me a Tooth laſt Week, fetch him quickly; What d'ye ſtand ſtaring at? Run fetch him immediately, or i'll cut your Legs off.

Saun. Gud I'se fetch ean to pull her head off an ye wull. [Exit.

Win. This will make her find her Tongue agen, or elſe for certain ſhe haſt loſt it.

Pet. Her Tongue, Brother? Alas! You ſee her Face is ſo Swell'd, ſhe cannot ſpeak.

Bian. You Jeſt Brother; her Face is not ſwell'd. Pray let me ſee, Siſter, I can't perceive it.

Pet. Not Swell'd? Why you are blind then; Prithee let her alone, you trouble her.

Enter Sauny and Barber.

Here, Honeſt Barber, have you brought your Inſtruments?

Barber. Yes Sir; What muſt I do?

Pet. You muſt draw that Gentlewoman a Tooth there; Prithee do it neatly, and as gently as thou can'ſt; And, d'ye hear me, take care you don't tear her Gums.

Barber. I warrant you Sir.

Saun. Hear ye Sir, cou'd not ye Miſtake? and pull her Tang out inſtead of her Teeth.

Bian. I'll be gone, I can't endure to ſee her put to ſo much Pain. [Exit.

Barb. Pray, Madam, open your Mouth, that I may ſee which Tooth it is. [She ſtrikes him.

Why

Why Sir, did you ſend for me to Abuſe me.

Saun. Gud be nea Angry, Yea ha ne aw yer Pay yet Sir. Cud ye not Miſtake, and draw her Tang inſtead of her Teeth Sir.

Pet. No, no: But it ſeems now ſhe won't have it Drawn: Go, there's ſomething for your Pains however. [Exit Barber.

Saun. Ye ſid ha taken my Counſel Sir.

Win. This will not do, Sir. You cannot raiſe the Spirit you have laid, with all your Arts.

Pet. I'll try; Have at her once more. Winlove, you muſt aſſiſt me; I'll make her Stir, if I can't make her Speak. Look, look! alas! How pale ſhe is! She's gone o'th' ſudden; Body O' me, ſhe's ſtiff too; undone, undone, What an unfortunate Man am I? ſhe's gone! ſhe's gone! never had Man ſo great a Loſs as I; O Winlove, pity me, my poor Peg is dead, dear Winlove call in my Father and the Company that they may ſhare in this ſad Spectacle, and help my Sorrows with their joining Griefs, [Exit Winlove. Speak, or by this hand I'll bury thee alive; Sauny thou ſeeſt how ſad a Condition thy poor Maſter is in, thy good Miſtreſs is dead, haſt to the next Church and get the Bier and the Bearers hither, I'll have her buried out of hand; Run Sauny.

Saun. An you'll mack her dead, we'll bury her deep enough, we'll put her doon intull a Scotch Coalpit, and ſhe ſhall riſe at the Deel's Arſe o' Peake. [Exit.

Pet. I will ſee that laſt Pious act Perform'd, and then betake my ſelf to a willing Exile; my own Country's Hell, now my dear Peg has left it. Not yet, upon my Life, I think thou haſt a mind to be buried quick; I hope thou haſt.

Enter Winlove, Beaufoy, Sir Lyonel, Woodal, Biancha, Tranio, Jemmy, &c.

Beau. Bleſs me Son Petruchio, is my dear Daughter dead?

Pet. Alas, alas, 'tis but too true, wou'd I had ta'ne her Room.

Beau. Why methinks ſhe looks brisk, freſh and lively.

Pet. So much Beauty as ſhe had muſt needs leave ſome wandring remains to hover ſtill about her face.

Beau. What could her Diſeaſe be?

Pet. Indeed I grieve to tell it, but truth muſt out, ſhe dy'd for ſpight, ſhe was ſtrangly Infected.

Bian. Fye Siſter, for ſhame ſpeak, Will you let him abuſe you thus?

Pet. Gentlemen you are my loving Friends, and knew the Virtues of my matchleſs Wife, I hope you will accompany her Body to its long home.

All. We'll all wait on you.

Beau. Thou wilt break her heart indeed.

Pet. I warrant you Sir, 'tis tougher then ſo.

Enter Sauny and Bearers with a Beir.

Saun. I bring you here very geud Men, an ſhe be nea Dead Sir, for a Groon more they'll bury her quick.

Pet. O honeſt Friends, you'r Welcome, you muſt take up that Corps, how! hard-hearted, Why de ye not weep? the loſs of ſo much Beauty and goodneſs, take her up, and lay her upon the Beir.

1. Bear. Why what d'ye mean Sir? She is not Dead.

Pet. Rogues, tell me ſuch a Lye to my face? Take her up or I'll ſwinge ye Saun. Tak her up, tak her up; we'll mak her dead-Billy, ye'ſt a twa Croons mear, tak her up Mon.

1. Bear. Dead or alive all's one to us, let us but have our fees.

Pet. There, nay ſhe is ſtiff, however on with her, Will you not ſpeak yet? So here take theſe Strings and bind her on the Beir, ſhe had an active ſtirring Body when ſhe liv'd, ſhe may chance to fall off the Hearſe now ſhe's Dead: So, now take her up away, come Gentlemen you'll follow; I mean to carry her through the Strand as far as St James's, People ſhall ſee what reſpect I bore her —— She ſhall have ſo much Ceremony to attend her now ſhe's Dead. There my Coach ſhall meet her and carry her into the Country, I'll have her laid in the Vault belonging to my Family, ſhe ſhall have a Monument; ſome of you inquire me out a good Poet to write her Epitaph ſuitable to her Birth, Quality and Condition, Pitty the remembrance of ſo many Virtues ſhou'd be loſt; March on, I wou'd ſay more, but grief Checks my Tongue.

Marg. Father, Siſter, Husband, are you all Mad? Will you expoſe me to open ſhame? Rogues ſet me down you had beſt.

Pet. A Miracle! a Miracle! ſhe Lives! Heaven make me thankful for't, ſet her down, liv'ſt thou my Poor Peg?

Marg. Yes that I do, and will to be your Tormentor.

Saun. Out, out, gea her nea Credit, gud ſhe's as Dead as mine Grannam, tak her, away with her, Sir.

Pet. Bleſs

Pet. Bleſs me, my Hopes are all vaniſh'd agen, 'tis a Dæmon ſpeaks within her Body; take her up again, we'll bury 'em together.

Marg. Hold, hold, my dear Petruchio, you have overcome me, and I beg your Pardon; henceforth I will not dare to think a Thought ſhall croſs your Pleaſure, ſet me at Liberty, and on my Knees I'll make my Recantation.

All. Victory, Victory, the Field is won.

Pet. Art thou in earneſt, Peg? May I believe thee?

Saun. You ken very well, ſhe was aways a lying Quean when ſhe was living, and wull ye believe her now ſhe's dead?

Marg. By all that's good, not Truth it ſelf truer.

Pet. Then thus I free thee, and make thee Miſtreſs both of my ſelf and all I have.

Saun. S'blead bo ye'll nea gi Saundy tull her, Sir.

Wood. Take heed of giving away your Power, Sir.

Pet. I'll venture it, nor do I fear I ſhall repent my Bargain.

Marg. I'm ſure I will not give you Cauſe y've taught me now what 'tis to be a Wife, and I'll ſtill ſhew my ſelf your humble Handmaid.

Pet. My beſt Peg, we will change Kindneſs and be each others Servant; Gentlemen, why do you not rejoyce with me?

Beau. I am ſo full of Joy I cannot ſpeak, may you be happy, this is your Wedding Day.

Saun. Shall Sauny get her a Bride-Cake, and brake o'r her Head, Sir? And wee's gat us a good Wadding Dunner.

Enter

Enter Geraldo.

Geral. Save ye all, Gentlemen; Have ye any Room for more Gueſts? I am come to make up the Chorus.

Pet. My noble Friend, wellcome; Where have you been ſo long?

Geral. I have been about a little trivial Buſineſs; I am juſt now come from a Wedding.

Pet. What Wedding, I pray, Sir?

Geral. Troth, e'en my own; I have ventur'd upon't at laſt: Madam, I hope you'll pardon me.

Bian. Yes, Sir; and ſo will this Gentleman.

Saun. Are not you a Gentleman-Hampdreſſer?

Pet. 'Tis e'en ſo, this proves to be Winlove in earneſt.

Geral. Good Gentlemen undo this Riddle; I'm all in the Dark.

Pet. You ſhall know anon; in the mean time believe it, Gentlemen. We want another Woman, or we might have a Dance.

Geral. My Widow is within, ſhe'll ſupply you.

Beau. Good Peg go and wait on her, and you Biancha too. [Exit. Peg, Biancha.

Pet. I tell thee, Geraldo, never had Man ſo obedient and loving a Wife, as I have now, I defie the World to equal her.

Win. Nay, Brother, you muſt except her Siſter.

Geral. You muſt except me too, or I ſhall have a hard Bargain of it; my Widow is all Obedience.

Pet. I'll tell you what I'll do with you; I'll hold you ten Pieces to be ſpent in a Collation on them, that mine has more Obedience than both them; them; to try which, let each ſend for his Wife, and if mine come not firſt I'll loſe my Bett.

Saun. Gud ye'll loſe your Siller ſure enough, Sir.

Both. A Match.

Wood. I'll go your halves, Geraldo, and yours Mr. Winlove too.

Win. Jemmy, Go tell your Miſtreſs, I deſire her to come hither to me preſently.

[Exit Jemmy.

Pet. A Piece more ſhe does not come.

Beau. You'll loſe Son, you'll loſe; I know ſhe'll come.

Pet. I know ſhe won't; I find by Inſtinct I ſhall win my Wager.

Enter Jemmy.

Jem. Sir, ſhe ſays ſhe's buſie, and can't leave Mr. Geraldo's Lady.

Pet. Look ye there now; come your Money.

Geral. Prithee go again and tell my Wife I muſt needs ſpeak with her immediately.

[Exit Jemmy.

Pet. I ſhall win yours too, as ſure as if it was in my Pocket.

Geral. I warrant you no ſuch matter: What will you give to be off your Bett?

Pet. I won't take forty Shillings.

Enter Jemmy.

Ger. How now?

Jemy. Sir, ſhe ſays you have no Buſineſs with her, if you have you may come to her.

Pet. Come produce, I knew 'twould be ſo; Sauny, go and tell Peg from me, I command her to come to me inſtantly.

Saun. I'ſe

Saun. I'ſe gar her gang wuth me, Sir, or I'ſe put my Durke to the Hilt in her Weam. [Exit.

Wood. Yet you won't win; I'll hang for't if ſhe'll come.

Pet. Yes, but ſhe will, as ſure as you gave forty Pieces to Court Biancha, I'll venture them to twenty more upon't with you.

Wood. Nay, I have loſt enough already.

Enter Margaret and Sauny.

Pet. Look ye here, Gentlemen.

Saun. O my Sol, ſhe's ean a daft geud Laſs, ſhe's at your Beck, teake her and kiſs her Mon.

Marg. I come to receive your Commands, Sir.

Pet. All I have to ſay to thee, Peg, is to bid thee demand ten Pound of theſe two Gentlemen, thou haſt won it.

Marg. I, Sir, for what?

Pet. Only for being ſo good natur'd to come when I ſend for you.

Marg. It was my Duty, Sir.

Pet. Come, pay, pay, give it her, I'll not bate you two Pence.

Geral. There's mine.

Win. And mine, Siſter, much good may it do you.

Bean. Well, Peg, I'll find thee one thouſand Pound the more for this.

Saun. But what wull ye gi Sauny that halpt to mak her geud and tame? Wuns ſhe was as wild as a Galloway Colt.

Enter Biancha and Widow.

Win. Look, here they come at laſt.

Bian. What did you ſend for me for?

Win. Why, to win me five Pound if you had been as obedient as you ſhould have been.

Bian. You have not known me long enough to venture ſo much upon my Duty, I have been my Siſter's Schollar a little.

Saun. But put her to Sauny to teach, Gud I'ſe mak her ſea gentle ye may ſtreake her and handle her all o'er, Sir.

Geral. You might have got me five Pound if you had done as you ſhould do.

Wid. Were it to do again you ſhould be ſure to looſe.

Marg. Fie, Ladies, for ſhame; How dare you infringe that Duty which you juſtly owe your Husbands? they are our Lords, and we muſt pay 'em Service.

Beau. Well ſaid, Peg, you muſt be their Tutor: Come Son, if you'll have a Dance diſpatch it quickly, the Muſick's ready, and the Meat will be ſpoil'd.

Pet. Come then, play, play.

A DANCE.

Now let us in and eat, the Work is done,
Which neither Time nor Age can wear from Memory;
I've Tam'd the Shrew, but will not be aſham'd,
If next you ſee the very Tamer tam'd.
